RECLAIMS A COUNTRY. A Dane Planted the Marshes and

Moors With Trees. Denmark has made a national hero of Capt. Enrico Mylius Dal- No Longer Any Need to be Pale, gas, the man who saved and re-made the country by watering the lesert and by planting the marshes and moors with trees. How it was done, Mr. Henry Goddard Leach has told in McClure's Magazine. In the disastrous war of 1864, Prassia wrested from Denmark much valuable territory. The soldiers of Jutland, trudging over the lack and barren heath, home to heir untilled farms, encountered a thick-set figure in riding-boots that stalked across the moors with spade over his shoulder. On nearer pproach, it proved to be young Captain Dalgas of the engineers. lready a veteran of two wars. When his late comrades in arms

"In your time and itself: 'n mine," he said, "we can turn that waste into forest and farms. perspiration had a disagreeable and win back more than we ever ost to the Prussians."

The enthusiastic dreams of the young engineer has been made to come true. Failing to get governnent aid, he formed the Danish burned off the heather, persuaded imber-producing trees, and went N. Y., and Kingston, Ont. up and down the country addressing mass-meetings and schools. At last the government lent its aid.

The result of the work of Captain Dalgas is that a new Denmark greets the traveller to-day. These lorty years have doubled and ripled the wealth of the Danish nation. Railroads and highways are outting the heath; new buildings and towns are rising everywhere Free-planting gives work for th destitute; the moor is peopled by families; the valuation of certain townships has risen one thousand and five hundred per cent. And i is not the reclaimed land only that has been improved by the planting of forests, for the woods have soft ened the climate and increased the fertility of the whole peninsula of Jutland.
