OWL CAUSES TERROR.

South Wales.

For three days it was a mystery. It was believed a madman had escaped and was in hiding in the woods near the little village of Carleton, Penrith, in South Wales. Then it was learned that an owl was responsible.

George Lamb, head gardener at Carleton Hall, was returning to the village one night about 10 o'clock when suddenly something struck him on the head, knocking off his hat and cutting a gash two inches long on the side of his head. Thinking some one had thrown a stone at him he searched behind the hedge, but could neither see nor hear anything. He went home and Sargeant Armstrong of the Penrith police was directed to investigate. As he was making the usual inspection, searching for footprints or finger prints on the moss and grass, he suddenly heard an angry hiss, and before he had time to recognize his assailant he was struck on the face, one of his eyes narrowliy escaping destruction. With the other eye he saw a huge owl, which was upon him once more, before he had time to recover. The owl cut as free from dandruff as you would wish to open his cheek with its beak. He beat the angry bird off, but could not capture it.
