MOLLY FORAGE IS DEADLY.

If You Want to Keep Your Live Stock Feed Only Sound Corn.

During the fall and winter months of 1911 and 1912 letters were frequently received by the Kentucky experiment station describing a peculiar and strange malady affecting horses, cattle and mules. Newspapers over the state frequently commented on the loss sustained by certain men in their community from a so-called "mysterious disease." An investigation and personal observation of this outbreak in Kentucky furnished conclusive evidence that the disease in question was forage poisoning, also called epizootic cerebellar meningitis and commonly termed "blind staggers," traceable in a majority of cases to unsound corn, fodder or fermented ensilage.

To control this disease and prevent the unaffected animals from contracting it has been demonstrated possible in Kentucky by discontinuing the feeding of molly forage. This is not a curative step with animals showing symp-

Photograph by Kentucky agricultural experiment station.

As a large percentage of the cases has been fatal even when receiving skilful medical attention. Very few cases have occurred after a complete change of feed was made. On one farm a complete change of feed was recommended to check the disease, and six cases appeared almost simultaneously between the fourth and seventh days following the change, but no further cases were reported, and it is safe to conclude that the infection gained entrance prior to the change of feed, after which time the disease had been incubating in the cases noted.

The acute form of the disease has been more prevalent than any other, especially in horses and mules. Animals so affected succumb in from two to three days from the time the first clinical symptoms were manifested. So suddenly have some of the cases developed that practically no premonitory symptoms were noted by the owner.

Animals were frequently found dead in the morning, that evidenced no dead in the morning, that evidenced no symptoms of ill health to the owner on the previous day. Horses were attacked at work in the field and died within a few hours.

THE TRIFLES THAT COUNT.

Better farming may lie in just such simple things as adjusting the plow to do the best possible work, in feeding stock so that not a bit of waste follows and in carrying out plans carefully laid.

What the world needs is not so much men who have thousands to lay out in land and equipment as farmers who know the value of details and have the will and the disposition to work to the line—Farm and Fireside.

Poultry Wisdom in a Nutshell.

Erect scratching sheds facing the south or east. Use clean straw litter. See that drinking vessels are clean and provided with clean water. Provide grit, hard and shell; also charcoal grit. Give a daily supply of green food. Keep a sharp lookout for chicken pox. If a few warts or pimples appear on comb, wattles or eyelids, bathe with comb, wattles and water, dry then apply carbolic glycerin. Use epsom salts in the drinking water. Keep coops, brooders and yards in repair and see that all vermin is destroyed.—American Agriculturist.

Winter Pruning.

Warm days between now and spring may be used to advantage, cutting out dead timber or branches that are too crowded among orchard or shade trees or shrubbery. Be careful in pruning to cut close to the shoulder so that the wound may readily heal next season. It is well in the case of trees to paint the wound over with some cheap paint in order to prevent drying out and cracking.

We're Gaining in Wisdom.

It's also doing the number of farmers who will examine corn shocks from the snowdrifts each winter, but not so shocking as formerly. Silos and shredders have reduced the number.—Orange-Jude Farmer.
