The Great Northwest

By W. L. Dixon

It is really and truly great. So great is it that no individual has seen more than a small fraction of it.

Let me say a word about the pioneer or homesteader who endures many hardships and plays an important part in the development of the country.

The following is the song (words only) of one who went through some rather chilling, if not thrilling, experiences during a very late spring a few years ago.

Oh, this is the great Northwest! Where the man of the homestead is blest

With a harvest of snow And a full cup of woe— For this is the great Northwest!

Yes, this is the great Northwest, Where we're all cursed more than we're blessed!

We've exultations galore, And many, many more. For this is the great Northwest!

The land-shark locates your land, And then you join the pilgrim band

Who had once a happy house, But now they only roam To a shack in the great Northwest.

You'll be turned black as sin in the West; Your mother wouldn't know you from the rest

But the color of your skin Shows that you've been taken in In the regions of the great Northwest

We'll not tell how very far you're away From your wood and your water and your hay, From the station and the store And a dozen places more

That you need in the great Northwest. We'll say nothing of the wind and the flies

And the dust that hangs up both your eyes. And the storms and the frost

And what everything will cost That you buy in the great Northwest. You may reach the home above from the West.

And dying, have a mansion with the blest; But in case you're sent below

You can never have such woe As you've had in the great Northwest.

Everything is great in the West— Expectations, disappointments and the rest;

But the greatest is the man Who always says "I can" And stays till he wins in the West.

And he stayed till he won, as we may suppose from the second edition of this song, which he revised and improved and now it reads as follows:

The Great Northwest (Second Edition; Revised and Improved.)

O, this is the great Northwest! Where the man on the homestead is blest

With a harvest of wheat That the world cannot beat, For this is the great Northwest!

Your friend will help choose your land And then you'll join the eager band Who had once a prospect poor

But now they felt quite sure Of a home in the great Northwest, You'll be tanned a little darker in the West.

But you'll be hale and hearty with the rest; For the color of your skin

Shows that you won't give in But thrive in the great Northwest. Everything is great in the West—

Enterprises, expectations and the rest; But the greatest is the man

Who always says "I can!" And works till he wins in the West. We'll not tell how very far you have strayed

From the townsite that last was surveyed; But the railroad with its grade,

Brings along its booming trade To you in the great Northwest. We'll say nothing of the wonders we have seen—

Of the mirage by the lakes and rivers shewn; Of the wonderful advance

On the prairie's broad expanse In the regions of the great Northwest. Yes, this is the great Northwest!

Where there's none cursed more than they're blest. We have stacks of gold here (gold-in-grain)

And the very best of cheer, For this is the great Northwest.

You may reach the home above from the West. And dying, have a mansion with the blest;

But when you're called to die You will leave it with a sigh—

Your home in the great Northwest. For this is the land that is blest; It offers more good chances than the rest,

For freedom and for wealth, For progress and for health— For this is the great Northwest.
