A WIRELESS EYE.

Remarkable Invention Will prove Ocean Navigation.

Interest keener than usual attended the recent arrival at St Lawrence ports of the Canadian Northern liner "Royal George" because during her passage across the Atlantic a series of demonstrations had been given of the possibilities of a new wireless aid to navigation. Through the genius of Marconi,

Like many inventions useful to FOR SALE. TEN PAIRS BREEDING mankind this wireless finder is remarkable for its simplicity. Although one of Marconi's engineers, Signor Tmilio Ichino, came out on the "Royal George" to make the Co., Limited, Collingwood, Ont tests, its operation does not require an expert, and any of the bridge officers can obtain a bearing as easily as with a compass and just as conveniently, the instruments being set up in the chart room.

Both the Marconi engineer, Signor Mmilio Ichino, and the Captain of the "Royal George," expressed themselves on arrival at Quebec as highly pleased with the experiments which had been made on the vovage. The instrument had been ac curate to a degree in detecting the compass direction of other stations whether on shore or on other vessels. They had been able to ascertain the compass position of Cape Race, Cape Ray, Father Point and the ships Columbia, Calgarian and Sicilian. The Columbia had been 68 miles away, the Calgarian 53 and the Sicilian 18. Both men were confident that neither wind, wave or fog would affect the accuracy of the new wireless device.

The Canadian Northern, since the inauguration of its Atlantic steamship service, has established a reputation for experimentation with new ideas calculated to improve ocean navigation. It was first to employ a "relay" of operators to secure continuous wireless service. Later it enabled Professor Barnes of McGill, Montreal, to test his device for the detection of ice at sea. Since that time one of its captains has conceived and developed a highly efficient device for the launching of small boats at sea. Now it is the Marconi-Bellini-Tosi System.
