MEN WHO URGED THE KAISER TO GO TO WAR.

Half a Dozen Prominent Germans to Whom He Has Listened.

We speak of the Kaiser as the War Lord, and assume that he represents militarism in its most hateful form, but even allowing that the Emperor of Germany is a very remarkable man, a lunatic who verges upon genius or a genius who trenches upon lunacy, the fact remains that not he alone is the moulder of Germany's policy. Like other men he has his associates and advisers. and if we look behind the imposing figure of Wilhelm we shall see the figures of half a dozen or more Germans, men of eminence in statecraft, in war and in science, to whom he has listened, and whose advice we may assume that he followed when he committed Germany to the momentous task that now lies before her. It is said that this ruler of millions has only one famillar friend, namely, Prince Emil von Fuerstenberg, at whose shooting box he has been in the habit of spending most of his vacation. This Prince is one of the richest men in Germany, the head of the famous "Princes' Trust" that collapsed not long ago, but a man of undoubted ability. He succeeded in the offecsures of Harden, the "yellow" journalist of Germany. The chief of the be a statesman of note, though it is common gossip that he has refused high office, and is famous as the only close personal friend of the Kaiser.
