Science in Peace and in War

It is inevitable that new discoveries in physics and chemistry should be promptly seized by military men and applied in devising death-dealing engines of appalling power. Ba is it necessarily inevitable that science should be more systematically ap plied, on the whole, to increasing the efficiency of high-powered guns than to mitigating the evils of disease and to better the general lot of humanity?

Ten years have passed since the Russian-Japanese war was fought In that decade it is safe to say that more costly experimental investigue tion has been conducted to increase the efficacy of guns and explosives than to eradicate any one of a doze human diseases for which there is a present no cure. The art of war is as old as the art of agriculture. Bu battleships are so rapidly improved that in less than five years the mopowerful dreadnought of her day becomes a third rate fighting machine. Can as much be said of harvesting machinery? When this hugest of wars is over, when we have counted the dead and wounded, when we have reckoned the dreadful cost in money of the mil lions of rounds fired, when we have tolled off the brilliant intellects that with relatives in Mt Forest. have been blotted out and that could Poults work so unnecessarily interrupted.

Ill be spared and then reckon up what we have lett in money and in hope he may have as much success in the new as he had in the old.

Will join Mrs Cameron and Viola. In his absence. Mr Alex Hamilton is hope he may have as much success in the new as he had in the old. work so unnecessarily interrupted. will the anomaly be perpetuated ; Will Reichstags, congresses and parliaments grudgingly allot $20,000 to discover the cause of some new mysterious wheat blight and $100,000 to discover a better kind of bomb that may be dropped from a dirigible airship ?-Scientific Am erican.
