Lieutenant Coutts goes to the Mediterranean

Westminster Abbey, Britain's Awakening

The following letter received from Lieutenant Coutts, R. A. M. C., brother of Mrs. Dr. Farquharson, which was received at Agincourt last week will be of interest to our readers. Dr. Coutts left Agincourt June 19th, received his commission from the War Office in London on July 3rd, responded to the call at Aldershot on the 9th and on the 15th asked to be in readiness at any moment to proceed to the Mediterranean though he was not informed as to his port of sailing or the place of destination. This letter was written at Farnborough and bears the date of July 15th and was written just before the order for the Southern front was received. His letter is as follows:

"If you know where Farnborough is, then you know where I am. Aldershot is better known to you. Well this is Aldershot—one of the training grounds for our soldiers. The town of Aldershot is two miles from here. In travelling over England you pass through considerable towns every few miles. The population is very dense. I came here on July 9th and became attached to the Connaught Hospital here. In times of peace it affords a few hundred beds but now by the addition of temporary structures there are 1000 or 1200. The increase is for the soldiers. Poor fellows! I have seen already deplorable results of the war in the battered wrecks of men. But splendid to relate their spirits are always superior to their bodies. They are not battered or conquered. This is the great tribute that is generally paid to the British soldier. The virility of our race, believe me, was never greater. That is one of the pleasing demonstrations of the war.

From a professional point of view my work is quite interesting. It is not at all heavy because there are a lot of men in my position attached here. It is a clearing ground for us. We are waiting to be sent on. More than half the men at present however are for home duty only. It seemed to me a shame that one so physically fit as myself should remain behind, so when I interviewed the war office I turned backward old time in his flight to the extent of two years to make myself the more eligible for foreign active service. The type of doctor here is very good indeed—competent and energetic. I have made special friends with three of them.—McLeod, a graduate of Glasgow who has been in practice in London for some years; Biffant, a New Zealander with French in his blood as his name implies and Dyke whom I knew in Glasgow when I lived there in 1904. We all board in this hotel with about 20 more khaki men. We find ourselves together in leisure hours and at present are all in the smoking room where we have been sitting from dinner time until 10 p. m. We have a table to ourselves in the dining room. These pleasant times will not last always. From time to time a group of men receives quiet and silent orders and quickly pass from view.

This is a beautiful valley—miles and miles girt about with hills in the distance on every hand. We have begun to explore the valley and each afternoon sees us sally forth in a new direction, with our military uniforms and swagger sticks—the baton of military officialdom.

This is a terrific war. The task is gigantic. The efforts of our Empire have to be equally stupendous. We are rising by degrees and the degrees will continue. I fully expect to see conscription after a while. There is always a section of a community that require compulsion. It is an awful ordeal for a man to face and yet we must face it to-day. Living here in Britain a man who is fit and free must have a thick skin to resist the appeals and pressure of public opinion. Everywhere the country is placarded with appeals to men to join the colors to do their duty. The newspapers all echo the refrain, the pulp calls upon men to be true to their country and duty. I fancy no preacher in the land preaches a sermon that has not a direct bearing upon the war.

I spent my first Sunday in London and found my way to Westminster Abbey for the morning service. Again at 3 p. m. I found myself in the same place. Again at 8 p. m. I was there. The preachers were three distinguished men. The chimes were mystical and enchanting in their effect. The English church service was delightful in its effect. The old Abbey with its dim religious light, its hallowed memories, the spirits of the departed great haunting its hallowed environs was wonderfully effective and carried me away in spirit out of the realm of material life into a land of spirit. Together with the solemn service the nation's awakening, its response to sacrifice, all blending together, made you feel that your life must not be of much consequence in the scale of desire. A majestic statue of Gladstone looked down upon me reflecting his splendid and noble nature. Peel stood near him, Ganning a little farther away and his great opponent Disraeli somewhat to the rear. I could imagine no scene in England more dignified or more calculated to call forth a man's devotion and service to his country.

And poor Germany! That great nation is fighting for her life with a spirit and an energy that I fear we have not yet emulated but will do so one day. Canada has not yet aroused. There are thousands of our young men there to-day who are never dreaming of joining the colors, who will yet I feel confident find themselves ranged on the fighting grounds of Europe, Britain simply had no measure of the task she was undertaking. It is being brought home to her more and more and in another year she will be fully awake. But another year will assuredly not close the war. That time is known to Heaven alone."
