The enlistment of millions of men in the new British army Why the Britisher Has the Best Phycreated many gaps in the ordinary ranks of industry, and the pressure of Government work grew more intense as time went on. There were large armies to be fed and clothed and equipped, and fewer workers to undertake this enormous task. Hence a large part of the national burden. Women are at work in the parks, on the land, on the tramways and railways. In increasing numbers they can be found in the tailoring trade, in the leather trade, in the manufacture of munitions and food.
