PRICEVILLE AND LIMITS The years are rolling by. In little while the year 1915 will be numbered with the paet, The hoary heads and the aged pilgrims are fast approaching to the end of their journey. We imagine that we go away back this last evening of the dying year to sixty-seven or perhaps eighty years ago and there we find those aged pilgrims small children with beautiful cheeks and curly hair, some the color of the raven and some golden and again we fancy that some one were telling those little opes that some of them were to live to 60, some 70 and very few of them to 80 years of age. We fancy that we hear the different ones asking the question " Is it I that is going to live 80 year more ? " Oh, how eagerly each one was to find out who was to live the longest. But we follow those long ago youngsters up to the present stag
