MAGIC MAKING POWDER
It is These That Bring Wrinkles And Make Women Look Prematurely Old.
Almost every woman at the head of a home needs daily many little worries in her household affairs. They may be too small to notice an hour afterwards, but it is these same constant little worries that affect the blood and nerves and make women look prematurely old. Their effect may be noticed in sick or nervous headaches, fickle appetite, pain in the back or side, sallow complexion and the coming of wrinkles, which every woman dreads. To those thus afflicted Dr. Williams Pink Pills offer a speedy and certain cure; a restoration of color to the cheeks, brightness to the eye, a hearty appetite and a sense of freedom from weariness.
Among the thousands of Canadian women who have found new health through Dr. Williams Pink Pills is Mrs. N. Worrall, Brookdale, Ont., who writes:—"After the birth of my second child I was so weak and run down that I was unable to do anything. The doctor said I had scarcely any blood in my body. I could not walk half a block without being completely exhausted and all the treatment of the doctor did not seem to help me. I called in another doctor, but with no better results. My feet and legs became frightfully swollen, I suffered with severe pains in my back and sides. I would be all day dragging around at my housework, and I was beginning to give up all hope of recovery. I had been urged to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills, but like many others, thought they could not help me when doctors had failed to do so, but after much urging I decided to try them. To my surprise in a few weeks I found myself getting better. I then gladly continued their use and found myself constantly growing stronger, and eventually able to do my house work without fatigue. I strongly advise every weak woman to give Dr. Williams Pink Pills a fair trial."
You can get these Pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

GERMAN FAIRY TALES.
Late Governor of Cameroons Told Wild Stories of Victorics.
The following extracts from a telegram addressed by Dr. Ebermaier, the late Governor of the Cameroons, to the German district authorities of the Protectorate after the surrender of Duala to the allied forces on Sept. 27, 1914, are instructive.
The doctor authorizes his subordinates to say:
The Kaiser has first taken the country which inflicted horrors on the natives, namely, Belgium, to which the Congo belongs. We have occupied the whole country and driven out the King.
Then the Kaiser has sent his soldiers deep into France and is bombarding the largest French city, where the Governor of the French lives.
The Kaiser has no longer a Kaiser. The Kaiser has captured General Kitchener, whom the English regarded as their best commander, together with 10,000 soldiers. Kitchener was indeed the worst enemy of the Mohammedan blacks, and took a whole country from the Great Sultan.
So many English ships have been destroyed that the English have now more than we have.
The English were not strong enough to take Duala, but had to call in the help of the French. We have, moreover, only surrendered Duala because there were so many white women and children there, to whom, according to the law of the whites, nothing can happen if no fighting takes place in a town.
The black soldiers of the English and the French have already deserted them in masses, and come to us to fight on our side, because they see that we are stronger.
IT CAN BE DONE.
Fackled the Thing That Couldn't Be Done, and He Did It.
"Somebody said that it couldn't be done, but he, with a chuckle replied that 'maybe it couldn't,' but he would be one who wouldn't say so till he tried. So he buckled right in, with a trace of a grin on his face. If he worried, he hid it. He started to sing as he tackled the thing that couldn't be done; and he did it."
Somebody scoffed: "Oh you'll never do that at least, no one ever has done it," but he took off his coat, and he took off his hat, and the first thing we knew he'd begun it, with a lift of his chin, and a bit of a grin, with out any doubting or quidding; he started to sing as he tackled the thing that couldn't be done, and he did it."
"There are thousands to tell you it cannot be done, there are thousands to prophesy failure; there are thousands to point out to you, one by one, the dangers that wait to assail you; but just buckle in with a bit of a grin, then take off your coat and go to it; just start in to sing as you tackle the thing that "cannot be done," and you'll do it."
Empty-Handed.
The afternoon at the new neighbor's had passed very pleasantly. James Jr., cried when told that it was time to go home.
"Never mind," said the lady consolingly. "You come again."
"It ain't that," said James Jr., "it's the walloping I am going to get from Henry. When I get home he'll say 'Halves,' and if I have to tell him that you didn't give me anything he will think I'm telling a story and punch my head for it."
He who has lost all confidence can lose nothing more.

GERMANS WILL LOSE BUT END IS FAR OFF
LOVAT FRASER SAYS SOME WARS LAST LONG.
Verdun Failure Proves That the West Front is Now Impregnable.
Lovat Fraser, writing in the London Daily Mail, declares the end of the war is not near. Sometimes wars, like Charles II, are "an unconscious time a-dying," he says, and adds:
"Early last winter I cherished a vague secret belief that the war might begin to end next July, and actually finish about the end of October. I do not think so now, for it is clearer than ever that unless Prussia is invaded, the Prussians are beaten to their knees, this war, in some form or other, will be always with us. We had better get on with the war and not think too much about when it will end."
Verdun Felled the Enemy.
"The battle of Verdun continues to rage intermittently, but there seems little doubt about its issue. The Germans have done exactly what they were permitted to do, and no more. They have flattened a salient with the shrewd and far-seeing acquiescence of the French, but they have not won an inch of ground which the French were not willing to yield in pursuance of their definite policy. The enemy have organized against the Verdun front the most formidable attack yet witnessed in the war, and they have utterly failed to achieve their purpose. They thus begin the spring with a deep consciousness of defeat, which has spread to their civil population.
"We are entitled now to draw from Verdun a further proof that the western front is probably impregnable, at any rate for the present. The lesson is one which may be found to cut both ways, unless the German numbers are very much diminished. More than that it would be unwise to say, although a shrewd commentator has pointed out that the western front is tending to develop a series of rather ragged salients. The conviction remains as strong as ever that, whatever may happen in other theatres, the war on land will be decided in the west. Wherever the Germans may go in their feverish search for a decision, always they must return to the calm and solid array of troops confronting them in France and Flanders.
Germany Short of Food.
"After Verdun the next prominent factor in the situation is the internal condition of Germany. Personally, I have never been much impressed by the stress laid upon Germany's weakness in financial position. She is contracting huge liabilities among her misjudged people which she will probably be unable to meet, and will perhaps eventually be compelled to repudiate; but shortage of cash is not likely to affect her attitude for a very long time to come. The shortage of certain kinds of food, as well as of certain materials needed for her staple industries, is of more immediate importance, and its effect grows steadily less obscure. One who knows more about Germany's internal condition than most people said to me: 'If we could only take the lid off Germany the world would be astonished.'
"Yet we must not count too much upon Germany's desperate straits. Remember that this race of cunning barbarians has been preparing for forty years to seek the mastery of the world. If they have to eat the soles of their boots, they will not yield at the end of twenty months.
Won't End Suddenly.
Having once started vainly in the West, the German military authorities apparently propose to strike again at Russia. Report credits them with contemplating a move against Riga and Petrograd, and this time report is probably correct. They will have to operate in very difficult country, especially if they reach the region of the Pskov Lakes, and they will attack under very different conditions from those obtaining when von Mackensen began his march across Galicia last May. Two unfavorable factors should affect them. The first is the recuperation of Russia. Already she has begun a preliminary activity, and is endeavoring with considerable success to regain control of the important railway line from Vilna to Dvinsk. She is also pressing the Austrians in Eastern Galicia, and is preparing to wage a campaign on her southern front which will be largely independent of the struggle in the northern area.
"The second factor is that if Germany strikes at Russia this summer she will doubtless have to look to herself in the west also. The Council of the Allies assuredly did not meet in Paris to talk about the weather. The principle of concerted action will come into play, and Germany may find that fighting on interior lines has disadvantages as well as advantages. Should the situation thus hinted at develop, the climax of the struggle on land may be at hand. But remember always that though this war began suddenly it is not at all likely to end suddenly. Our little South African War lasted for two years after its climax, which may be taken to be the fall of Pretoria.
Invasion of Britain.
"No examination of the military outlook can omit some reference to the possibility of the invasion of these islands, about which much has recently been said and written. The attempt will probably be made before the war ends, but unless the government and the military authorities grow heedless or make mistakes of judgment, we can now regard the possibility with reasonable calmness. In plain words, the Germans have probably missed their chance, as they have missed so many chances. The nearer we approach the end of the war the more vigilant we ought to be about invasion. It will come, if it comes at all now, as a desperate gambler's throw, and not as a deliberate and well-conceived military operation. These desperate throws sometimes succeed, and there can be no more silly attitude than to leave invasion out of our reckoning. We ought to be prepared to meet it any day and any night, and never more than now. But it ought to fail, and judging by present indications it will fail, should it ever come.
"I have tried to explain the outlook as it appeared to a layman with some opportunities of special knowledge. The conclusion I have reached is in a sentence. The ultimate victory of the allies seems more certain and inevitable than it was a year ago, but there is not one safe sign that the war is anywhere near a close."

WRITE MUCH AND SAY LITTLE.
Verdun Battle Described in the German Papers.
German war correspondents whose despatches about Verdun have been appearing recently with increasing frequency, have curiously little to say. They write columns, but one looks in vain for a new fact, a new idea that can throw any light on what must be a cheerless situation. You are told about lurid sunsets and the roar of the cannon and the desolation of the landscape. Above all, you have immensely long-winded accounts of the intrepidity and good humor of the troops, their invincible belief in victory, the admirable relations between the men and their officers, etc. Every correspondent seems to follow a laid-down plan both as to what he says and does not say, or is not allowed to say. One wonders at the insistence of these emphatic declarations about the courage of the men and their firm belief in victory. We would be inclined to doubt it were it not stated so often.
Interesting in its way is a long despatch from a correspondent if the semi-official Lokal Anzeiger. He describes a scene on the railway line not far from Verdun, where he saw a company of prisoners, among them "two dozen Englishmen." "During the last period," he says, "our worthy cousins have not been noticed very much." The correspondent states that English and French did not regard one another with very friendly looks, but "both agreed in showing measureless astonishment and desire at the well-filled dishes of food and the large help of meat served out on tables to the German soldiers."
"D—," swore one Englishman, the unadorned type of a London dockerman. "Why on earth are we carrying on this war, and what is the sense of the entire blockade? Why, the people here eat better than we do at home."
"Just what a London dockerman would say."
"The Englishmen, like all their imprisoned compatriots, show themselves much more garrulous than the French, who are usually taciturn and reserved. The garrulity is of the noisy, vehement kind. They regard the war as something in the nature of a football match, and are quite prepared at its close to cheer for the vanquished side. But on the German side they find no encouragement." Then follow long descriptions of the British steel helmets, of festivities and military music, and columns of vivid stuff about crops in the French fields and how nice various vegetables gathered in the French gardens taste. It is with this sort of war correspondence that the German at home must be satisfied.

HELMETS SAVE LIVES.
British Troops Now Better Protected From Enemy Fire.
The value of the helmets which are now being supplied to the British troops at the front is indicated in an article in the current issue of the British Medical Journal, which says that in a big fight where the British were wearing the new helmets the number of penetrating gunshot wounds of the head was equal to less than one-half per cent. of the total number of fractures of the skull was under one per cent. of all injuries. Head wounds have been set down, upon the experience of recent wars, as accounting for fifteen per cent. of all casualties, and the latest data show that, in trench fights at least, the percentage is as high as 25.
"The British helmet," the Journal explains, "protects the side and back of the neck and the temples and the upper part of the face as well, of course, as the top and sides of the head. It has also a smooth round top. It stands away from the head about one-third of an inch all around, the weight being borne by a padded leather band fixed to the inner side of the surrounding steel by a series of india rubber buffers, each about the thickness of a lead pencil, and about one inch long."

His Coat and His Pants.
A horse-dealer was showing a horse to a prospective buyer. After running him backward and forward for a few minutes he stopped and said to the buyer, "What do you think of his coat? Isn't he a dandy?" The buyer, noticing that the horse was broken-winded, replied, "Yes, I like his coat all right, but I don't like his pants."
Even in the fatherland they speak the mother tongue.

FRENCH BETTER FOKKERS.
New Aeroplane Said to Outclass the German Machine.
The Paris Journal announces the doom of the Fokker, the fast German battleplane, which by its superior speed has caused some mischief in the ranks of the allied airmen.
According to the Journal a new aeroplane, fitted with a motor of new design, has twice beaten all world records for speed and the record for military machines in peace time. The latest French fast flying scout machine, it adds, will easily get the better of the Germans and leave their machines far behind.
C. G. Grey, editor of the Aeroplane, in an interview threw some light on the achievements both of the French and the British in combating the latest German attempt to secure ascendancy in the air.
"The Fokker," he said, "is only a very bad copy of a French machine, the Morane, with a very big engine. But we have had in this country for about eight months privately built machines which outclass the Fokker in every way, not only in speed, but in climbing and weight lifting power. It was not until attention was drawn to the existence of the Fokker, however, that the Government officials began buying them."
IF DEAD COULD PARADE.
Germany's Lost Men Would Take Five Days to Pass.
New York saw 132,000 men march twenty abreast past the reviewing stand in twelve hours in the preparedness parade.
The present United States army at its full authorized strength of 120,000 men could pass in about eleven hours—less than a day.
The United States army of 206,000 fighting men agreed upon by Congress could pass in a marching day and a night.
The dead of Germany alone in the war are put by British official figures at 700,000. That number would take more than five marching days to pass.
The armies fighting at Verdun are in the neighborhood of 900,000 men. They could pass in a week.
The British Empire's present army is estimated at 5,000,000 men. They would take more than thirty-six days—six weeks of daily marching.
BABY'S WELFARE.

No mother wants to see her little ones suffering from colds, constipation, colic or any other of the many ills that so often afflict little ones. Thousands of mothers have learned that by giving an occasional dose of Baby's Own Tablets to their children they can keep them well. Concerning the Tablets Mrs. Richard Boston, Pembroke, Ont., says:—"Baby's Own Tablets saved my little girl when nothing else appeared to help her.
