Captain Dr. Gun in Scotland

Lloyd George speaks hopefully of allied victory in a few months.
Cossacks are appearing in Hungary causing consternation to the inhabitants.

A tangle of a most serious nature has occurred in connection with Home Rule, and Premier Asquith is being accused as a traitor by John Redmond and his followers. This is most disappointing. When Lloyd George evolved proposals acceptable to both Carson and Redmond, it was thought the sky was clear, now one London paper says the situation is the worst since the '60s of last century.

The liquor party adopted the "We'll show you" attitude towards the Hearst government to the recent bye-election. They had been swearing vengeance ever since the premier suddenly decided to give us a war prohibition measure, and they acted very vindictively in the Perth election. There is no doubt the Liberal candidate got the support of the anti prohibitionists at the polls in that riding. But it wasn't because they loved Rowell's policy more, but that they might influence the other fellows more.

Leaving Barwick, we reach Scotland by crossing the River Tweed, and as our train is running "on time" we arrive at Waverley Station at 6 p. m., having covered the 400 miles from London in eight hours. Perth is reached shortly after seven, after having passed the famous Forth Bridge, where one gets a fine view of part of the Grand Fleet. Here I met my brother, who is attached to H. M. S. "Ophey" and whom I had not seen for some years. We spent the night in Perth and the following morning travelled to Dundee. Here my brother received unexpected orders to return to his ship, so I was left to my own devices. Spending another day I saw as much of Dundee as the time would permit, including a trip over the famous Tay Bridge, the longest in the world. Returning to Edinburgh, my "leave" would only allow me to spend one day there, much too short a time to even get a glimpse of this beautiful city, but long enough to form the resolve not to return "home" without spending at least a week exploring this historic spot.

Our Toronto Letter

The Ontario Government for some time past, notably during the last session of the Legislature, has been manifesting signs of increasing impotence and the result of the bye-election in North Perth shows that the people of the Province are turning to Mr Rowell's wise and constructive leadership and foresight in public affairs as a sheet anchor in the difficult times which are brewing.

The Liberal Party, both in Dominion and Provincial politics, is taking the lead in preparing to meet the after-damp of the explosion in Europe, whilst the Tory Governments at Ottawa and Toronto seem content to let the future take its course. The meeting of the National Liberal Advisory Committee during the past week in Ottawa has demonstrated the progressiveness of the Dominion Liberal Party in the far-reaching resolutions which were adopted covering social and other problems which will have to be dealt with at the end of the war. Mr Rowell, in England studying conditions there and gathering data as to how the much greater problems of the mother country are being grappled with, is putting the members of the Ontario Government to shame, as he has already done other and more responsible men in the matter of recruiting.

In the House last session Mr Rowell's resolution regarding the organization of the resources of the Province for the successful presentation of the war, coming as it did immediately upon his conscientious support of the Ontario Temperance Act, clearly demonstrated the potentiality of his leadership, whilst his recently announced Constructive policy for future Canadian Liberalism is backed by a most practical declaration of the means to attain the end.

Not a little satisfaction has been gleaned by the Liberal members in the Ontario House from the fact that although the Government has, from time to time, voted down every constructive effort on their part, it has in many instances been compelled by the force of public opinion to ultimately adopt the Opposition's proposals. Amongst other things, the Government has repeatedly rejected Liberal proposals for the elimination of the patronage system in the Civil Service and the promotion of the Agricultural interests of the Province. During the last session of the Ontario House, Mr Carter (Liberal member for S. Wellington) strenuously championed the cause of a Civil Service Commission and the Government was attacked so strongly by a combination of Liberal members in close touch with agricultural Ontario, on its failure to even attempt to introduce a measure of value to Agriculture, without obtaining any response on the part of the Government, that rural voters throughout the Province, without regard to political affiliations, are turning away in disgust from the listless inert, don't-know-what-to-do attitude of the present Administration. North Perth is a case in point.

BYE-ELECTIONS
According to the London Advertiser rumor has it that the political bomb in North Perth went off just as Andrew Browne, M. P. P., was preparing to resign his seat in East Elgin to accept the shrievalty of Essex County. The Advertiser adds that the announcement of a contest in East Elgin, in face of the result in North Perth, is as likely to be heard as reg-time in a convent chapel. The date has not yet been fixed for the bye-election in S. W. Toronto, where a vacancy was caused by the death of Hon. J. J. Foy.

The first line above is the title and style of a monthly Journal published at the Ontario Military Hospital, Orpington, Kent, England. It is contributed to by the Staff of the Hospital, men of the A. M. C. and the Nursing sisters. It is a most readable production and of course, apart from some articles of serious import it has abundance of clever things in lighter vein, quips, jokes and "take-offs" on the institution or on one another. Here is one of the readable pieces by our own Dr. Gun, who is on the staff. "The Editor of the "Stretcher" has asked me to give you a few impressions of a visit to Scotland two weeks ago. As my trip was necessarily hurried, these impressions will as a consequence be very brief. Leaving London at ten in the morning by the Great Northern Railway from King's Cross Station, one passes swiftly and pleasantly through the beautiful Midland counties, passing without slackening speed, many large and important cities and towns, making one wonder how it is possible to support and maintain such industry. Peterborough, a city of 40,000 inhabitants, is our first stop. Here lunch baskets are ordered, to be put on the train at our next stop, York, the railway company having discontinued carrying dining cars owing to military orders. Arriving at York we wish for time to visit this historic old place, but are only allowed five minutes. Then on again to Newcastle, being able in the meantime to enjoy a dainty lunch provided for us at York. Who has not heard of Newcastle-on-Tyne, famous for its many industries. Between Newcastle and our next stop, Berwick, we travel for many miles along the North-Sea shore, so soon to be the scene of the great naval engagement—the Battle of Jutland.

Leaving Berwick, we reach Scotland by crossing the River Tweed, and as our train is running "on time" we arrive at Waverley Station at 6 p. m., having covered the 400 miles from London in eight hours. Perth is reached shortly after seven, after having passed the famous Forth Bridge, where one gets a fine view of part of the Grand Fleet. Here I met my brother, who is attached to H. M. S. "Ophey" and whom I had not seen for some years. We spent the night in Perth and the following morning travelled to Dundee. Here my brother received unexpected orders to return to his ship, so I was left to my own devices. Spending another day I saw as much of Dundee as the time would permit, including a trip over the famous Tay Bridge, the longest in the world. Returning to Edinburgh, my "leave" would only allow me to spend one day there, much too short a time to even get a glimpse of this beautiful city, but long enough to form the resolve not to return "home" without spending at least a week exploring this historic spot.

These impressions would not be complete without recording an incident which occurred on the train returning to London. In my compartment were two naval officers—a young man of unknown rank and an older one, evidently holding the rank of Commander. It was the second morning after the great naval engagement. The older officer was as silent as the sphinx, but the younger man was full of the most harrowing details of the result of the battle, giving us all the impression that Britain had sustained a most serious defeat. It was no relief when the Commander called the young officer out to the corridor to lecture him on his volubility—the action tending to confirm our fears as to the British losses. Happily, we learned on arriving in London that instead of a defeat it was a splendid victory.
