PRUNE KYLE TREES OFTEN.

A Second Clipping in Summer Will Make Them Look and Bear Better. The first logical operation for the peach trees that have begun their second year of life in the orchard is pruning. This will reduce the amount of twig and branch surface to be sprayed for scale and leaf curl to a considerable degree, thereby reducing the expense of such work.

To secure successive yields of fine fruit there must be a proper balance between the processes of vegetative growth and fruit production. Excessive leaf and wood growth is always at the expense of fruit production.

Abundant fruit production is a direct demand upon the vigor and life of the tree. Pruning during the dormant season encourages vegetative growth.

Weak trees may be invigorated by proper pruning when dormant, but an excessive wood growth may be induced by too severe pruning.

Lack of pruning is frequently responsible for fruit of small size and indifferent quality, for an expensive type of tree for spraying and harvesting of fruit, for a lack of economy of the vigor and resources of the tree which can be directed toward fruit production and for premature old age and final destruction of the tree.

A certain amount of light is essential to the production of fine fruit. If the branches of a tree in full foliage are so numerous and close together as to shut out all the sunlight, all fruit in the center of the tree will be of inferior size and of poor color, and such a tree will soon fail to produce even inferior fruit in the shaded portion.

In pruning a one-year-old peach tree the first consideration is the selection of the main branches, the branches that are to support the fruit bearing surface of the tree. These branches should be vigorous and well placed that we may develop a well balanced tree.

From two to three vigorous main branches are in most cases sufficient to form the basis of the head of a peach tree. Four may sometimes be allowed to grow, but more than this number is usually excessive, especially with varieties which make a dense habit of growth. The tree may appear too bare and open with only two to three main branches left at the beginning of the second season, but the space will soon be utilized by the development of vigorous side branches.

To prune a one-year-old tree, then, first select the best two, three or four main branches that tend to form the strongest, most symmetrical and best balanced tree. Cut off all other branches close to the trunk. Summer pruning is not a common practice among peach growers in general, but it is a very beneficial and profitable operation in young orchards. Peach trees set upon good soil and thoroughly cultivated will make a very rapid growth the second summer. Some of the leading shoots will commonly make a growth of from five to six feet if allowed to develop unchecked.

Where such a growth takes place the side branches on the leaders are often poorly developed and the tree has really grown out of bounds. A tree will also frequently develop too many of these long leading branches besides some smaller shoots, commonly termed "waterers," and the top of the tree becomes too dense and thick. Such a tree will require severe pruning the following spring to get it into proper form. A too severe winter pruning is what we wish to avoid in young peach trees, as it promotes vegetative growth and delays fruit production. Summer pruning has the opposite effect, and instead of forcing out still more vegetative growth its tendency is to check the tree and to promote fruit bearing.
