To Stanleyville, 600 miles beyond Bukama, a good steamer service is operated, says the Christian Herald. From that point to Mahagi, on the west shore of Lake Albert, no work has been done, but the survey gives a distance of 548 miles. From Mahagi the Uganda Government steamers pla on the Nile as far as railhead south of Khartum, where the Sudan Government trains and steamers and the Egyptian Railway take the traveller through to Cairo and Alexandria. This line, when completed, will be more than 6,000 miles long. The traveller may be forced to wait now and then, while the crew "shoos" a lion or a belligerent elephant off the track. and sometimes the engine and phant may meet head on.

GASOLINE LOCOMOTIVES.

The Russians Are New Using Then at the Front.

The mobility of advancing troops and their ability to hold a positio successfully depends upon the bringing up of supplies from bases beyond the reach of enemy shells. The task is still more difficult when sudden as caults call for heavy reinforcements of fighting men and munitions at scattered points. The motor truck has answered admirably upon many occasions, but railways, when available, are still better. Steam traction however, is not practicable where coal and water are not readily at hand, and, besides, the coal-burning engine is not so economical as might be desired.

The Russian armies have suffered from a deficiency of coal and steel lo comotives, but they have made great use of small, light, gasoline locome tives which are easily and cheaply built. These sturdy little tractors are to locomotives what the army mule is to the horse. They are trustworthy and hard-working, and need little care. All they ask is narrowgauge tracks laid upon almost any kind of roadbed and enough gasoline to feed their motors. The Russians use them not only to carry forward supplies to the advancing troops but to haul ammunition and food to the trenches. Each locomotive weighs about seven tons, but it can draw over a rough roadbed at least thirty tons

The tractors operate on high and low gears. On low gear they do four miles an hour, and at full speed about eight miles. They can run with equal facility forward or backward. One of out pain by our home treatment. Write their good points is that the exhaust Co., Limited. Collingwood.
