> GROWTH OF THE SPIRIT OF DE-MOCRACY IN RUSSIA.

Russian Army and Russian People Have One Single Aim, Winning Of the War.

The Duma has been greatly responsible for the growth of a spirit of democracy in Russia, for although the first Dumas did not accomplish much in the way of legislation, the members enjoyed the right of free speech and the newspapers reported what was said in the Duma, whereas they were prohibited from reporting public Write to-day for our big speeches made outside the Duma, FREE CATALOGUE writes Mr. Riddle, formerly American

There never has been much manifestation of public opinion in Russia because the mass of Russian peasants have no opinion to express, so far as foreign politics or national government is concerned.

The spirit of nationalism and a feeling of sympathy for all Slavs has been the one subject which has brought forth a manifestation of feeling on the part of the Russian masses, who are intensely interested in the fate their "Little Brothers," the Slavs who have been, or still are, under Turkish or other foreign domination. It was this spirit which brought about th war of 1877 with Turkey.

Even the Russian peasants who take no interest in home or foreign politics feel intensely on this question of na-What the Revolution Means

The revolution in Russia seems to me to be more a purging of foreign influences than anything else. It is an expression of national feeling. There have always been many persons about the Russian court who have been strongly pro-German. The court itself, that is, the family of the Czar, minimum has always had strong pro-German sympathies. Although France has been Russia's natural political ally the Spring Crops Hasten Maturity court has always shown more interest for German institutions than for A minor incident illustrates this feeling. On the birthday of the Kaiser, January 27, and the birthday of the late Emperor of Austria, August 18, the Czar always gave a banquet to the Teutonic embassies, drank the health of the rulers and extended Soil Improvement Committee | every courtesy to their representation to July 14, the French national Probably he considered Germany to stand for the principles of authority and autocracy, while France stood for democracy.

It is true that since the Japanese war there has been a certain development of the democratic idea in Russia, but I do not think the people will want to do away with the throne. They do want to rid the government of some of the pernicious growths and barnacles that have adhered to it.

Russians always have enjoyed great deal of democracy in their local government. The Zemstovs, which are somewhat like county councils, are chosen by the people, and their voice is supreme in matters of local government. In the present war the Zemstvos have been active in the forward ing of supplies and other military matters and have enjoyed the ful support of the people.

The Russian government always has been patriarchal, and the peasant is willing to let it take care of national

Aim to Fight War to Finish

Although the Russian army and people have not always been one in the past, they are at the present time. They have one single purpose, and that is the winning of the war, which to them means the liberation of Slavs who are under foreign domination,

There has been sporadic revolutions a Russia since 1825, and it is said that Alexander II. had a constitution ready to sign the day he was assassing ated. These revolutions have never changed to any great extent the form of government and have been mostly in the cities where students, college professors and educated people who had not a voice in the government have directed them.

Throughout the country the revolutionary movements have not been felt. Some times mobs burn houses and buildings in the provinces, but it is usually to get food and not to attempt to change the form of government.

The terrorists, anarchists and other organizations which in the past have continually been agitating against the government do not represent the people at large. Even they have been quiet since the war began and have refrained from embarrassing government

In short, the present disturbance i a revolt against foreign influences the government and graft in the ad ministration of affairs. The people are determined that the war shall be fought to a finish and they are forcing the government to do it.

I believe that if a plebiscite were held the majority of the 150,000,000 Russians would not vote for the overthrow of the Emperor or the abolition of the throne.
