Destroy, and in Other Cases Restore the Power of Speech, Hearing and Even of Sight.

The amazing effects of shell explosions have been well exemplified in the present war.

In some cases these effects have been to deprive men of the power of speech; in others, to restore it. In the same way hearing has been lost. and also regained; while sight has been suddenly banished, and as suddenly brought back.

But one of the most astonishing ef fects of all was that narrated by a French captain. It occurred while he other fruits, and milk. was occupying an observation post in a tree. It completely wrecked the room, but, although it passed within a few inches of the shaver, he sustained barely a scratch. A pretty close shave indeed.

A COUNTER-CHARGE.

Thrilling Moment in Encounter Between Cavalry and Aeroplane.

To show that it is sometimes posingly low over guns and yet escape much in return in saving women's a man-of-war had just arrived in the being brought to earth, Mr. Claude Grahame-White cites in Heroes of the of cavalry. One of the aviators of the Allies, descending near some German outposts, was surprised by a patrol of hostile cavalry that galloped into a corner of the field where the aeroplane had alighted and rode full tilt toward it to make its occupants

At the side of the field farthest from the Germans lay a wood; and the space between the aeroplane and the trees was so small that the machine could not rise into the air in that direction. All that the pilot could do in his endeavor to escape was to run his machine across the ground directly toward the approaching horsemen and seek to rise sufficiently high to sweep above their heads. He took his machine abruptly into the air and flew down straight toward them, thinking that his chance was poor, and expecting either to be struck himself by bullets or to have some vital part of his machine hit.

There was one point in his favor, however: the German cavalrymen, taken by surprise when the aircraft came rushing toward them, had opened fire in a scattering and very haphazard manner. Only just above their heads, although travelling very fast, swept the aeroplane, with its pilot and passenger crouching low in their seats. Over the cavalrymen it flew and then it began to climb rapidly; and although a storm of bullets had met it as it approached and had been directed on it while it passed overhead, the craft flew on unchecked. No vital part of its mechanism was hit, nor were its occupants injured.
