----FOOD SITUATION AROAD.

Britain Has Increased Acreage and French Outlook is Better.

The grain and food problems to be met the coming year are altogther different from those of the past year, asserts a well known expert in grain. In England the acreage devoted to food crops is about two million acres in excess of last year. The caring for this greatly increased acreage has been possible owing to the importation of a large number of American tractors, reported as high as 5,000, with several thousand more expected to be deliverfall ploughing. The crops in England are expected to be sufficient to materially reduce the demand upon foreign crops for the past year. In France the outlook is so much better that is is expected, according to commercial advices, that importations of foreign wheat will he less than half of the estimated requirements last year. In Italy the situation has also steadily improved as to the supplies of food, and the crop prospects are better than last year. Harvesting began in Italy the latter part of June, and has progressed quite clendily By arrangements of the Minister of War peasants were released for harvest

The stocks abroad have been improving for at least two months. The situation was expected to be quite serious early in the year, but owing to the availability of tonnage the low point in the supply was passed earlier than anticipated and stocks have been teadily increasing since that low
