GREATEST EVENTS IN HISTORY OF MODERN WORLD.

Thankful Mankind Will Always Remember 1918 as "Peace Year," When Democracy Triumphed Over Autocracy In the Struggle to Establish Liberty and Justice as the Ruling Principles That Are to Control the Civilized Nations.

OWN through the ages, 1918 will remain one of the great as the year 1066 changed the entire future of the British Isles, and 1492 altered the progress of civilization, so will the armistice year be connected in the minds of men with a mighty turn in the direction of the affairs of the world. With generations yet unborn Nov. 11th will be a date as glibly stated as it is with us who took part in the celebration of the event. It was the day when the war between two great systems of human government came to an end with the triumph of democracy over autocracy, so 1918 is to remain in between the epoch when the few rulthe nations and exploited the many and the epoch in which the many ruled "for the greatest good of the greatest number." The democratic idea has not yet been perfected, and mistakes are sure to be made in the future and excesses committed, but at least the trend of the world towards liberty and progress is now

The story of 1918 reads like a ro-

line of the year in a chronological

Looking back over the out-

table, one finds not only the greatest day in the experience of living men but also the darkest period of the war. It seems odd now to think that the situation of the Allies was desperate during the terrible days from March 21st onward until Generalissimo Foch launched his great offensive in July. We did not know a year ago that the German morale was nearing its breaking point or perhaps we might have faced the de- 13 velopments of 1918 with a greater feeling of certainty as to the outcome of the struggle. But the German General Staff realized that it had to secure a decision quickly, and von Ludendorff prepared for the great effort that was to smash the co-operation between the British and the French, break through to the Channel ports, capture Paris and end the war with a victory for the warlords. The Allies were not prepared for the magnitude of the German effort. The Huns gathered together the forces released by the Russian collapse and launched their first attack in March against the British. The spot was well selected. Gen. Gough, one of the least efficient of the British commanders, had to meet the offensive with the Fifth British army, which gave way gradually, and the Germans secured one of their greatest successes in the war. The disaster taught the Allies an important lesson. They learned the value of a unified command, and at the end of March, Foch, the greatest military genius discovered in the war, took charge of the entire strategy of the Entente armies in co-operation with the American forces. Five times the Germans struck in the months that followed, but in each offensive the results achieved by them were small- | 20. er. Foch was waiting for the psychological moment. Every week added to the size of the American armies and every week increased the ex- 24. haustion of the German fighting forces and decreased the morale of the German people at home. During the first week of July things did look very critical for the Allies. The Germans had reached the Marne and counted on the next offensive breaking through to Paris. Then Foch | 2 with that peculiar genius which makes a great soldier, selected the hour to strike, not a moment too soon and not a moment too late.

On July 18th, the French delivered the first blow that was to be followed by a series of crashing offensives. Never again were the Germans able to snatch the initiative even for a moment. First the British would strike, then the French, then the British, then the Americans. And at last the famed Hindenburg line crumbled and the end was in sight. Before the end of August, even the most pessimistic person knew that victory was a certainty, though nobody guessed how near it was. When the end came on Nov. 11th, the terms accepted by the Germans staggered the world. They indicated that the pride of the warlords was completely crushed. It was the most ignominious and humiliating surrender in modern history. After the last great effort in the spring, the Central Powers had been too exhausted to postsion of another winter campaign. When Bulgaria, Turkey and Austria collapsed in quick succession, the German people would stand no more. Amid a crashing of thrones that marked the passing of autocracy, the armistice was signed. It is too early as yet to get any idea of the political effects of the war. The worst menace that has developed during the year is that of Bolshevism. It is a very extreme expression of the right of the masses to rule. In Russia, the Bolsheviki have grown oppressive during the past year. They hate not only the upper classes and the capitalists, but also the more moderate middle classes. In order to defeat their opponents, they have adopted the policy of terrorism, and their excesses It is generally recognised that a great deal of industrial unrest will follow is during such periods that the Bolsheviki in all countries can hope to produce a harvest of anarchy.
