New British Field Marshals. With the award of batons to Generals Plumer and Allenby there are now a round dozen of British Field-Marshals, of whom seven-Haig, Egerton, the Emperor of Japan, Wilson, Foch, Plumer and Allenby-have been made during the war. Lord French, of course, received his baton the year before the war broke out. The senior Field-Marshal is the Duke of Connaught, promoted in 1902, and the Emperor of Japan and Marshal Foch are the only foreigners on the roll. It is believed that the King of the Belgians will shortly be added to the list. The King of Spain may also in due course receive the honor. At present he is the senior General of the British Army.
