NEW CAPITAL FOR OTTOMAN EMPIRE

IF TURKS ARE SHUT OUT OF CONSTANTINOPLE.

Choice of New Centre of Sultanate Lies Between Broussa and Konia.

The question whether Constantinople is to remain the seat of the Turkish Sultanate has been the source of a ceaseless polemic in the columns of the European press for several long months. It is a question of tremendous import, involving widespread national, religious and trade interests, and, some would have it. the whole future attitude of Islam toward the western European powers. If, however, it is finally decided that the Turk, having obtained possession of the city of the Golden Horn in victory, must now lose it in defeat, it is generally conceded that the selection of the new Ottoman capital will lie former is the more logical choice, owing to its close proximity to the more civilized world; but Konia may security, buried away in the Turkish

It is said to have been founded on the suggestion of Hannibal, and, under the name of Prusa, or Prussa, it was the capital of Bithynia, whose inhabi tants, for their part, were emigrants from Thrace. Bithynia survived for several centuries, until Nicomedes III bequeathed it to the Romans in 74 B. C. The Turkish connections with the city dates from 1329, when it was captured by Orkhan, the chief of the Ottomans. They, of course, lost it to the Mongols in 1402, but subsequently regained it. It has more or less remained in their possession until Breadstuffs.

Mr. Bradshaw gave the following instance of the manner in which wild life resources are depleted by those who hunt as a means of livelihood instead of recreation: "The destruction that can be wrought by a single individual whose goal is the slaughter of game for financial gain is appalling. "Some ten or twelve years ago a family of ray acquaintance homesteaded on the south shore of lake Johnson, Saskatchewan. This lake at that time was a sportsman's paradise, and is still considered to be a choice hunting ground for waterfowl. There were four adult males in the family, all excellent shots, and as soon as the hunting season opened they started their deadly fusilade, and from daylight until dark for six days a week they hunted as long as a goose remained to be shot. They kept one man steadily hauling the game to Moose Jaw, 49 m'les distant. Among other things, they admitted earning enough money in two years to purchase and pay for an automobile."
