A Merciful Bullfight.

Though devoted to builfights, Portuguese are unusually kind to animals. The two things, says Lord Frederick Hamilton in his reminiscences, seem irreconcilable, until you grasp the fact that a Portuguese bull- Rich, Red Blood Needed to Keep fight is absolutely bloodless. Neither bulls nor horses are killed! the whole spectacle indeed is mere an exhibition of horsemanship and skill.

The bull's horns are padded and covered with leather thongs. The cador rides a really good, highly trained horse. Should he allow the bull wooden sword only, which he plants harmlessly on the neck of the bull tion of even one inch from the fata spot. He will be hissed from the ring. On the other hand, should he touch the fatal spot the occupants of the galleries shower small change and cigarettes into the ring and sometimes hurl their hats there as well.

The espada gazes at the hundreds of hats reposing on the sand with the same expression that a prima donna assumes when the flora ltributes are handed across the footlights. He bows again and again; then, taking up a hat he glances at the galleries. Up goes a hand, and the hat hurtles aloft to its owner with unfailing accuracy. I always considered the espada's feat in returning the hats as far more extra ordinary than his futile manipulation of the inoffensive wooden sword. The bull, meanwhile, after his imaginary slaughter, has trotted home contentedly to his underground quarters. Even if he has his horns bandaged while in the arena, the bullfighters have to exercise their skill and acrobatic agility to the full. Few of us would care to stand in the path of a charging polled Angus bull, hornless though he be. The Portuguese bullfights are certainly full of life and color, though the Spaniards affect an immense contempt for them.

A significant development in the production of British films is announced by an advertisement in the London Times for a university professor of sociology, psychology and scientific research to assist the producer of a well-known company in the casting of photo-plays.

The Origin of Meteors.

No question has been more disputed among astronomers than that which concerns the origin of "shooting stars" -more properly called meteors.

Laplace was of opinion that they came from volcanoes on the moon. A recent authority, Sir Robert Ball, thought that perhaps they were thrown out from terrestral volcanoes in the distant past.

What we are able to observe of them from specimens that fall upon the earth would seem to indicate that they are debris of some kind. They are plainly fragmentary in character. and when not of mere stony stuff are of various metals, chiefly iron. It is entirely conceivable that they are fragments of smashed-up worlds, but the theory that they are debris of to us. comets that have gone to pieces is more plausible.

Meteors entering our atmosphere travel through it at rates which seem to vary from ten to over one hundred miles a second. Friction rapidly burns them up, so that probably only the slow ones are able to reach the earth without being entirely consumed.

Nature's Gem Box.

The northwestern part of Uruguay is a newly discovered field for the production of amethysts, which occur in "geodes." The geodes, so plentiful that they are picked up in the fields, are carried on mule-back or in carts to the nearest railway station and shipped in barrels to Salto, whence they are transported by river boat to Montevideo. Naturally, it will be asked, "What is a geode?" Originally, it was a hole in rock. Water percolating through the rock deposited silica, making a lining for the cavity. The lining grew thicker and thicker, and after a long time, if the rook was broken or "weathered" to pieces, a hard nodule would drop out. The nodule is a geode; and if, as sometimes happens, the silica has formed crystale incide of it, colored by metallic salts, the goode is a little jewel box contains
