In Historic Canterbury.

Miss Edith Edge describes Visit to Cathedral and other sights.

Another letter to her home here from Miss Edith Edge, teacher in old London narrates her trip to Canterbury, one of England's most historic places. We quote:

Monday we went as per invitation to Caxton Hall to be officially welcomed to London by the League of Empire. Princess Louise was to be there to welcome us too as she is one of the patronesses, but was indisposed. It was frightfully foggy and all the speakers mentioned the typical London fog we were experiencing. We had to get out of school at playtime in order to be there in time. At five the meeting opened. Sir Geo. Perley, High Commissioner from Canada read Princess Louise's message of regret at being unable to present and conveyed her greetings to us. Then Hon. Mr. Fisher, Minister of Education, spoke for a few minutes. He is called "silver-tongued Fisher" but although he was very eloquent, he only spoke of how much we might learn from them. Then Dr. Rendall, headmaster of Winchester Public School and President of the League, spoke. He gave a full account of the Imperial Conference held in Toronto, this summer and of the great hospitality of the people in Toronto. Dr. Allan, head of the Education Dept. of the L. C. C. spoke next and welcomed us explaining why we were having experience in the slum schools, in order to understand better England's educational problems. Then Sir George Perley replied on behalf of the Canadians and Sir Jas. Allan, High Commissioner N. Zealand on behalf of the New Zealanders. Mr., the head of Toronto Board of Education, spoke for a few moments too. Sir Geo. spoke best of all I thought although Dr. Rendall was very good.

Yesterday we went to Canterbury. As soon as we arrived we were met by Mr. Cozens, Hon. Sec'y of the Archaeological Society and some of the other officials and taken into the refreshment room where we were served hot tea or coffee and some biscuits. That was just what we needed as there was no heat on the train down from London. Then we went to the Castle Keep, now filled (almost) with coal and met the mayor who told us all about it.

It was built by Wm the Conqueror on the site of an old Saxon Castle, as a fortress to defend one of the most important cities of the time. Later, it was used as a storehouse for the royal with the dungeons for prisoners underneath. In one corner was the remains of a spiral stair case and in the opposite corner an old wall with openings on to each floor. The walls are eleven feet thick. It is used as a storehouse by the Coal and Gas Co.

Then we went to the Dane John where the Mayor explained to us what it was. Canterbury has walls part way around the city with towers every little piece. Inside the walls just in front of the tower was a high mound with an obelisk on top. The Dane John is a public park with a lovely avenue of limes and elms. In one corner is statue to Christopher Marlowe, a native of Canterbury. The mound was used to spy the country round about. In the moat outside the wall, was a tank from the late war and a piece of Nelson's battleship. Further on we saw the "Invicta", George Stephenson's second engine. It's a queer looking thing with high funnel and big wheels.

Then we went to St. Martin's church, the oldest church in christendom. Here King Ethelbert was baptized and Queen Bertha was allowed her christian worship. St. Augustine came there to begin his work of christianizing England. Up at the front beside the choir was the bishop's seat where he sat to take communion. At the back was the baptismal font in which Ethelbert had been baptized and the "lepers' squirt", a hole in the wall where lepers and ex-communicated people might squirt through and see the high altar and hear the service.

Then we went to St. Augustine's Abbey. We went through the big gateway into the Courtyard. Facing us was the Abbot's house where he used to entertain distinguished visitors. On the left was the student's dormitories, on the right the Library and a high wall with the ruins of an old Norman tower. At the right of the wall are the ruins of an old church which had been built by Ethelbert, Bertha and St. Augustine were buried. They are excavating there now. The Abbey fell into bad times and was used as a brewery for a long time. It was bought back again and used now as a training school for Anglican missionaries. We were shown through the Library of the Abbot's home.

Then we went to lunch at Gaywood's. We had a delightful lunch for 2s 6d and then went to the Cathedral. It is a most beautiful one. I'm not at all fussy about stained glass ordinarily but this was the most beautiful glass I've ever seen. Up at the front is the place where Thos. A. Beckett met his death. We were told the whole story of his murder with all the gruesome particulars. He was buried behind the altar and the steps up to his tomb are worn down by the feet of

Five cent Nickel Piece Now Being Minted

Dei Gra; Rex et Ind: Imp."

On the other side it will bear this impression: "In centre the figure 5 with the word "five" on the right, and bearing the word "Canada" above, and two maple leaves over the date of issue below.

the pilgrims to his tomb. No trace remains of his grave as Henry VIII robbed it of everything of value and it took 26 cartloads to take the spoil back to London.

Stephen Langton "the father of English liberties" is buried to the right of the altar, Edward, the Black Prince, is buried near Beckett. Over his tomb is a recumbent statue of himself attired for battle. Over his body hangs his doublet, helmet, glove and short sword. Just at the end of the Cathedral was the Archbishop's chair.

Service started at 3 o'clock so the Senior Canon who was conducting us had to leave us and left us to the tender mercy of — who showed us through the crypt. Ever since the Hugonots came from France in the days of Elizabeth they have held service in the crypt at 3 o'clock in French, while upstairs service was held in English. The Cathedral was partly built by Langfranc and finished by Anselm. It was built by St. Augustine originally, but his cathedral was torn down. The Gothic towers are the best proportioned towers in Europe and were copied in Westminster Abbey.

Then we went to the Greyfriars and were shown around by the ex-mayor, who owns the property. You know the Greyfriars or Franciscans was the order founded by St. Francis. They were going to christianize the Saxons and made Canterbury their headquarters. The old house in which they lived is still preserved and they are making excavations which reveal foundations of their old church.

Mr. Mead, the city librarian took us to Westgate, the only remaining gate of the six original ones into Canterbury. Above the gate is an old Armouries, a debtor's cell and a criminal cell. Over the criminal's cell was an old gallows used once upon a time. In the debtors cell were a couple of old bicycles, one with one huge wheel and the other called a "bone-shaker," more like our modern cycles.

Then we went back to Gaywood's where the Mayor had tea for us. He and his wife sat at the head of the table. One of three sergeant-at-arms of the city waited on us, at least assisted. He passed cigarettes around after tea. Afterwards the mayor made a speech and representatives of the different parts of Empire, expressed our appreciation and gratitude.

Then they conducted us to the station and we arrived in London at 8.32.
