Push Boats a French Marine Novelty.

The pushing boat is the latest suggestion in improved means of water transportation. This novel project, the invention of an official of the French mercantile marine, is designed to take the place of a tug and also of changeable—one day bright, the next the line which was his only means of the motor portion of a self-propelling cold and stormy, that the mother is returning to the roof, and thence to barge. New Forests for Old.

Field work on the Petawawa forest experiment station and the other stations carried on by the Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior ceased about the middle of December, and the officers have returned to Ottawa to make a record of the work of the field season. Just as the farm experiment stations have aided agriculture by discovering new methods of growing plants and indicating the best varieties, so the forest experiment stations are assisting forestry and lumbering by studying and putting on record the best methods of harvesting the timber crop and also of handling out-over or burned-over areas in order to get a new crop started containing the best species of trees. The forest is Canada's second most important natural resource and whatever assists in the development and atlitzation of this great resource is of importance to every Canadian.

A big one was dug up recently, however, not far from Tucson, Ariz., by Dr. Gidley, a palaeontologist of the United States National Museum. It is a complete skeleton, representing a specimen which in life must have weighed about half a ton. The glyptodon was so sluggish that a mile a month must have been just about its best racing speed. It fed on herbage, presumably, and possessing no weapon of defense, would have been easy prey for carnivorous enemies if its armor had not afforded adequate protection.
