History of Early Durham.

(As a contribution to the Historical Society lately formed here, we re-publish the story of early Durham, as written and given by Dr. J. F. Grant in 1908.—Ed.)

Prior to the year 1837, what we are now proud to call the town of Durham, was an unsurveyed wilderness.

The party proceeded first of all to Oakville, where one of the surveyors, Col. Chisholm, who had just been through these parts, was then staying.

Reaching the Saugeen River they crossed and reached the top of the hill about where the English Church now stands.

Disastrous Fire in Hopeville

On Monday night, Aug. 14th, at about 9 o'clock, fire broke out in the oil house, at the rear of Chas. Wale's big store at Hopeville and completely destroyed the premises, including the building, a large portion of the general stock, post office, furniture in the dwelling up-stairs, etc.

HOPEVILLE

Harvest is in full swing around our burg. A new concrete bridge has been constructed at McDonald's Corner and is a credit to the township.

By the year 1848 the hamlet gave promise of being of considerable prominence. At the date we have last mentioned the Crown Land office for the Co. of Grey was removed from Owen Sound to this place, and Mr Geo. Jackson placed in charge thereof as government agent.

The location of the Land Office at Durham attracted many prospective settlers who would otherwise have located elsewhere and thus the village received an impetus which soon raised it to the dignity of quite a centre.

About the year 1848 the first frame house was built for the accommodation of the Land Office and this house still stands. It is at present occupied as a residence by Mr Robt. Scott.

The medical profession was first represented by Dr. Wood then by Dr. Moore and in 1858 by the late Dr. Gun.

When the Railway fever began to stimulate the pulse of North Western Ontario communities, the village of Durham did not escape the epidemic.

A brief reference to the circumstances which led to the isolation of Durham, from the railway world will be sufficient.

It was the old story of strife between different localities which being too freely indulged in, redounded to the permanent injury of the participants.

When the Toronto Grey & Bruce Road was in contemplation, overtures were made by its managers to the people of Durham and vicinity with a view to obtaining such local support as would warrant the construction of the road to that point.

Each locality however wanted the railway in its own midst and it was found utterly impossible to harmonize the differences hence the progressive scheme collapsed and the people were left to reflect upon the lost opportunity of railway connection.

In 1872 the village became incorporated as a town. The initial meeting of the now incorporated town was held in Dalglish's hall.

The above were elected by acclamation and a poll being demanded in the north ward, the following were elected:

East Ward: H. J. Middaugh, W. R. Rombough, A. C. McKenzie. West Ward: George Russell, Donald McKenzie, John H. Smith.

Having learned wisdom from experience, the next opportunity of obtaining Railway communication was eagerly seized upon. When the Wellington Grey and Bruce project was set on foot the town gave a bonus of $22,500.
