An Actual Maple Leaf Inspired Noted Song.

How "The Maple Leaf Forever" came to be written by Alexander Muir is related in the following interesting narrative by Lieut.-Cof. A. E. Belcher, first vice-president of the Ontario Historical Society.

I had the pleasure of knowing the author some years before he wrote these immortal verses. He was a school teachcer, and in those days the remuneration was very small. I speak of him fifty years ago. He then lived in the east part of Toronto; almost immediately opposite his small house, was what was then called Leslie's Gardens, where they raised fruit and other trees for sale; it was quite a Variations-Joffre, Jefferson, Godfrey, Variation-Curtiss. park as well, as other kinds of trees grew there.

We young men coming from outside places boarded at three or four dollars per week at the then farmers' taverns situated in the vicinity of Market Square. Every Man to His Own.

Work is play when it is the work we love. The English navelist, Mr. H. A. Vachell, in his book of memolrs, Fellow Travelers, makes the point in this little story: I remember a rare old boy in California, a pioneer who had crossed the plains in a prairie schooner. I found him digging post holes under a blazing sun. And he was a rich man. "Why do you do this?" I asked. He looked at me with twinkling eyes. "Why do you drive tandem?"

he demanded "Because it's such fun," I replied. "And that," he observed solemnly, "is why I dig post holes."
