True is that one does not have so wide of confusion which is created by the sight altogether of too many articles Of course city merchants know the great value of advertising as a seller of goods, and are continuing to learn the value of them to definite city

However town and village merchants have been quick to make their offers by means of the advertising and they have held their rightful customers by means of a continuous news service of their merchandise in the local newspapers. The merchant who does not tell his fellow citizens brough the columns of the Review, about the quality and price of the goods he has bought for their use, is a man who is helping the city houses to continue their mail order business. These city merchants let us know their bargains and their service. Do your business with your local merchants who are glad to serve you and willing to "tell the world" the story of their merchandise through the
