

STORIES OF WELL-KNOWN PEOPLE

"Touched" Them!

Recently Prebendary Carlie, head of the Church Army, was dining with one of the rich City of London companies. Asked to reply to a toast, he mentioned that just before the dinner he had arranged a supper in his own kitchen for men rescued from the Thames Embankment, the menu being thick pea-soup and bread.

At this point one of the guests near him sprang to his feet and exclaimed: "Here, I can't stand this!" Seizing a plate, he put a pound note into it, afterwards handing it to his neighbor. In spite of the chairman's protests that it was out of order, the plate went half-way round the table, and a large sum was collected for the "down and out."

King Edward's Advice.

In his "Life of W. T. Stead," published recently, Mr. Frederick Whyte states that once when Lord Acton went to see King Edward, His Majesty gripped him by the collar and said: "Where did you get this dress? I have never seen a worse-fitting dress."

You go and ask John Burns who his tailor is, for there has never been a man at my levee whose dress fitted him as well as John Burns's," Mr. Burns, by the way, has just celebrated his sixty-seventh birthday.

A Natural Inference.

An amusing story, attributed to Mr. Austen Chamberlain, is going the rounds of the London clubs.

It concerns an Englishman who lost his way in Rome, whither he had gone on a brief visit after the close of the Locarno conference.

As he knew no language but his own he was in a bit of a quandary, until it occurred to him to write the name of his hotel on his visiting card, and hand it to the first well-dressed man he met.

The Italian thus accosted turned, and, with the charming manners of his race, accompanied the Englishman in solemn silence until they reached the hotel.

The latter thanked his guide volubly in the only language he knew, whereupon the Italian looked at him in amazement, and remarked in perfect English: "I thought you were deaf and dumb!"

No Favouritism.

As most people are aware, Lord Beaverbrook was plain Mr. Attkin prior to his receiving a title some years back.

His aged mother lives in London, and a friend of his, meeting her for the first time, said:

"Mrs. Attkin, I have the honor of knowing your distinguished son."

Her reply was: "Indeed, I am very glad. Which son?"

"That," remarked Lord Beaverbrook in telling the story, "is the spirit in which mothers should bring up their sons."

"Himself He Could Not Save."

How many noble lives has that One inspired of whom it was said, "He saved others—himself he cannot save!" One of the finest of such stories has come recently from the island of Madagascar.

Doctor Moss was a British man born in Madagascar, and after a medical course in Edinburgh he gave himself to the service of the Malagasy for thirty-five years. At last, worn and half-blind, gray and thin, he went at the call of the London Missionary Society to begin work on the shores of an inland lake. There he spent himself for the sick in their poor houses. But always he dreamed of the day when he could build for them a hospital.

One day, utterly spent with his toil, he accepted an invitation to take a long-earned rest in a lovely forest home that belonged to two old friends. There, in the quiet, his strength began to revive. But very quickly his retreat was discovered, and news was brought to him that plague had broken out around his station. Worn as he was, he could not resist the call and returned at once to fling himself into the tremendous task of beating the plague. One day he saw and attended forty sick people; another day he spent in and out of the homes of the suffering; the third day he performed two operations, but in the midst of the third operation his strength gave out utterly. In a week he was dead of the plague.

As he died he told those about him not to think of him as dead. "The real I has not perished," he said. But the very day he died work began on the hospital of his dreams, which the Malagasy have turned into a memorial to their noble friend. His burial was brought out a great company, French, English and Malagasy, Catholics and Protestants, high officials and simple natives, all crowded to do him honor. They laid him to rest in the heart of that French colony for which he had given his life without stint and so willingly. His memory will be a bond of unity for three peoples. He is gone, but his work lives on.

Surnames and Their Origin

CRANE
Variation—Crain.
Racial Origin—English.
Source—A place, also a nickname.

The manner in which such a family name as Crane could have originated is likely to be puzzling to the casually curious, for certainly the crane was not a common enough bird in England of the middle ages to have occurred to a man's associates in that period when various descriptive phrases came into use to differentiate one individual from others bearing the same given name.

There might have been exceptional cases here and there of dealers in rare animals who could have gotten the surname from the fact that they sold cranes. But that would not account for the very many families which today bear the name. It might also, and undoubtedly was, in some instances, conferred upon a man as a nickname, and from this develop into a family name.

But the explanation, in the vast majority of cases, lies in a custom quite widespread in the middle ages, and now all but forgotten, except where the owner of a little inn, restaurant or curio shop desires to lend an air of quaintness and antiquity to his business. The custom was that of placing outside his door a sign bearing the picture of some animal or article. Lettered signs were little used because the bulk of the population could not read. But the picture was a distinguishing mark to the uneducated as well as the educated eye. It was not uncommon, on busy streets, to see a veritable menagerie on the signs of the shops and inns of a single square. It was much easier to refer to a man simply as "Geoffrey Crane" than as "Geoffrey at the sign of the Crane." Hence the modern form of the name, though at one period it was preceded by "de la" (of the).

BRYAN.

Variations—Bryant, Briant, Breon, Brien, Brian.
Racial Origin—Norman-French.
Source—A given name.

Unfortunately for those who would like to determine accurately the nationality of their ancestors by means of their family names, a good bit of confusion exists between the surnames Bryan and O'Brien. Similarity of sound and spelling has led to interchange of these names in a host of cases. There are many Bryans who trace their names back to one of the Irish Bryans. Likewise there are Bryans whose names should logically be spelled Bryan or Bryant. For while Brian is Irish, and inevitably so when the prefix "O" is used, Bryan and Bryant are Norman-French and there are hundreds of families of this name in North America and England whose ancestors never saw Ireland.

Bryan was a Christian name among the Norman invaders of England, and it is from this source that the English Bryans and Bryants developed, as well as the modern French Brien. It was originally, of course, "de Bryan" and "de Brian," being variously spelled.

As a Christian name, however, it was Celtic rather than Teutonic, though names of the latter classification predominated among the Normans. The Normans had picked it up in their previous occupation of Brittany early in the Christian era. The Bretons are Celtic, belonging to the Cymric branch of that race, together with the Welsh, as distinguished from the Irish and the Scots, who form the Gaelic branch. The meaning of the name was the same as that of the Irish Brian, however, being derived from the Celtic word for "strength."

HOW TO RELIEVE CHILDREN'S COLDS

Avoid Serious Results by Using Baby's Own Tablets.

When a child shows the first symptoms of a cold, such as sneezing, redness of the eyes, clogged or running nose, prompt measures for relief may avert serious results. Mothers should always have on hand some simple, safe and effective remedy for immediate use.

Baby's Own Tablets act quickly, contain no opiates or narcotics, are tasteless and harmless. Mrs. Joseph Cadieux, Holyoke, Mass., says:—"I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my children and find them a very satisfactory medicine. When my little boy had a cold I gave him the Tablets at night and he was well next day. I give them to the children for constipation, and they always do good. I think Baby's Own Tablets are much easier to give a child than liquid medicine. I recommend the Tablets to all mothers who have small children and believe they should always be kept on hand."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Unchangeable Manhood.

These to the end of time shall mark the man:
Courage to face the changing tides of life;
The will to meet and bear his share of strife
And wrest from it what victory he can.

Custom and fashion may make new demands,
But honest laughter and the cheerful smile
Shall, to the world's last hour, remain in style,
And men shall love the mind which understands.

The gentleman shall always gentle be
Whatever laws the government may make,
These things shall stand till life's last thread shall break:
Honor, and faith and mirth and courtesy.

A thousand years from now, though life seems strange,
He shall be loved who brothers when he can,
A noble spirit shall proclaim the man.

For what is truly noble cannot change.
—Edgar A. Guest.

A Poem Worth Knowing.

"Phyllada Flouts Me."

If one man could claim authorship of all the poems written by "Mr. Anonymous," he would be one of the greatest, as well as one of the most prolific, poets in the world. Few of the fine old ballads in English have an author's name attached to them; yet it seems strange that a charming poem like "Phyllada Flouts Me," of which we quote the first and last verses, should never have been owned.

O, what a plague is love!
How shall I bear it?
She will incessant prove,
I greatly fear it.
She so torments my mind,
That my strength faileth,
And wavers with the wind
As the ship sailleth.
Please her the best I may,
She loves still to gamsay:
Alack and well-a-day,
Phyllada flouts me.

I cannot work or sleep
At all in season;
Love wounds my heart so deep
Without all reason.
I gin to pine away
In my love's shadow,
Like as a fat beast may,
Fond in a meadow.
I shall be dead, I fear,
Within this thousand year;
And all for that my dear
Phyllada flouts me.

HEALTH BROKE DOWN

Could Not Get Sleep for Hours After Going to Bed.

"It is not natural for me to sit down and write a letter in praise of a proprietary medicine as I had always been skeptical as to their virtues." Thus writes Mr. Arthur Seguin, Storthooks, Sask., who further says:—"But three years ago I opened a general store here in Storthooks and placed on my shelves a few lines of the best known proprietary medicines. Among these, naturally, were Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. As there were three of my customers who were obtaining good results from taking the pills, and as I was in need of a medicine I decided to try them myself."

"I had been suffering from catarrh for years, and my inside work had completely broken down my health. I was coughing all day, suffered from indigestion, and could not sleep until three or four hours after retiring. I started the pills, not with any great confidence, but by the time I had finished the second box I marked much improvement. At the fourth box I felt quite recovered, but continued them for some further time. My cough has left me, the indigestion has disappeared and I now fall asleep almost as soon as I am in bed. In my store now I do not hesitate to recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to any who are feeling run-down or without energy, as I think they are a blessing to mankind."

"If others who may feel skeptical will give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial they will be convinced as was Mr. Seguin. You can get the pills from your druggist, or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Indians.
The teacher was trying to demonstrate the truth that love and protective care is instinctive in all parents. The story of the baby Moses and the child Samuel had amply illustrated the point from the human side.

"And now," she said mysteriously, "I'm thinking of mothers that don't look or dress as we do! They wear feathers."

Instantly came the answer from one bright little girl. "Indians," she said triumphantly.

In the same class the following definition of a frog was given:
"He is that thing that when he sits down he jumps up, and when he jumps up he sits down."

Diphtheria.

When Kesson and the good dog "Balto" carried antitoxin to the people of Nome last summer, they were applauded by the whole American Continent, not only for trading through ice and snow on an errand of mercy, but because they arrived in time to save many lives. Even the smallest urchin standing in front of a bulletin board marking the stages of the race with death knew the point of the mad drive was that, to be of use and save the people from death, the antitoxin must be given early. Every man and woman, every mother and father in Canada and the United States was made aware that a case of diphtheria is certain to recover if antitoxin is given on the first day of the illness; that every day lost means so many chances less; that if delayed until the 6th to 8th day, antitoxin may be of little use. Time is the important factor. Early administration means cure; delayed administration may be too late and futile. The parent, the doctor and the medical officer of health share the responsibility for early administration.

It is good to save a child from death, but it is not better still to save a child from disease? During the year 1925 research workers in the health field have perfected "Toxoid," a sure preventive against diphtheria. It is safe and absolutely sure; further, it gives protection against diphtheria without any bad effects. Take your child while he is well to your physician for the "Toxoid" treatment; you will then enjoy an easy mind all through the winter because you know he will be protected against that dreadful foe of young children, diphtheria, and all the evils in its train, such as an impaired heart and general debility.

A Fire of the Imagination.

The day, which had begun as Indian summer, had changed rapidly through the afternoon until at twilight, it became a raw, nipping halibut of coming winter. The proprietor of the village inn, with a lighted lantern on his arm, entered what had once been the barroom but was now converted into a men's lounge room. In cold weather this room was heated by an old-fashioned cast-iron box stove. Chancing to look out of the windows, the proprietor recognized a party of woodsmen returning from their work in the woods to the inn, where they lodged. A look of contrition overspread the proprietor's face. "There comes those wood-choppers," he reproached himself, "probably half-frozen. 'nd I ain't got any fire started yet!"

With his fingers the proprietor combed his forehead thoughtfully. Suddenly his face brightened. Stepping quickly to the stove, he raised one of the lids and set the lighted lantern within. Then he replaced the lid and walked around to the front of the stove. As he drew out the slide to the draft, the opposite wall immediately became illuminated with a bright, cheery glow. Seating himself comfortably the proprietor awaited his guests, who soon entered, boisterously complaining of the sudden change in the temperature.

"At-a-boy!" cried the leader enthusiastically when he saw the cheerful glow. "The boss's got a peach of a fire."

The men gathered about the stove, rubbing their chilled fingers vigorously, their faces aglow with contentment at the comfort of the room. At last they seemed to be warmed through. They left the stove for the chairs and benches that were scattered about the room and began to assemble their smoking equipment.

"You fellows all warmed up good?" affably inquired the proprietor, rising from his chair. "Because if you be," he continued, "I want 't borrow the lantern to go out and get some kindlingss 't start a fire with, and to do 't chores."

And, suiting the action to the word, he walked over to the stove, removed the lid and took out the lantern. A look of incredulous amazement overspread the faces of the woodcutters. That was quickly followed by a sheepish grin, and that, in turn, as the proprietor closed the door behind him, by a roar of indignant laughter.

Glorious Singing.
"What a glorious voice—what a soul in her singing!" whispered the gushing lady to the bored critic sitting next to her, as the soprano on the platform gave forth her not too musical strains. And the critic answered darkly—"I thought of flounder, but sole never occurred to me."
