STORIES OF WELL-KNOWN PEOPLE

The Prince's "Double."

Being a member of the Royal Family seems a very dizzy height to most of us, and "happy as a king" and "happy as a prince" are phrases which show what sort of a life we imagine that Royalty leads.

The gentleman was entirely unaware of his resemblance to the then reigning monarch until, one evening, when he entered a box at a provincial theatre, the whole audience rose and cheered him, while the band played "God Save the King."

Starting Again at 71.

There may be some people who think seventy-one a good age to stop working, but Sir Thomas Wilkes Clifty is not one of them.

It is twenty-five years since Sir Thomas gave up his practice at the Bar to take up the position of Master of the Supreme Court.

All his life he has worked hard. He began working as a junior barrister from ten to half-past seven in chambers, and then going home and putting in another four or five hours there.

But with all this he has not been less successful in his private life. He has been married three times, and has five children.

Pick up a little life as you go. Taste it and try it and don't say no 'Till you've met with the savor that's just your style.

Oh, live it and try it, its sorrow and smile.

For somewhere and somehow there's something for you.

That's lovely and lordly and helpful and true.

Pick up a little life as you swing Out every day to the toll of the thing. Wishing your wishes and nodding your head—

Oh, somewhere the visions are lovely that thread Around you and over you to lead you at last To mansions of light from the low-vaulted past!

Pick up a little life—it is here. Mixed with strange problems, with laughter and tear.

Oh, live it and dare it and lift a knight's lance And spring to the foray and trust and drive on!

And you'll come to your own at the founts of the dawn.

Win Him With Color.

If you are a single girl, and have grown fond of a single man, but he, although friendly, does not seem to be attracted to you in the way you wish, win him with color.

Colors have a big effect on us. At one time any color did for the inside of a factory. Now the coloring is scientifically designed to cheer and stimulate the workers.

All men have a color that holds a peculiar and subtle attraction for them. It may be a rosy pink, a pale, a flaming red—anything. Find out someone—by observation, a little artless questioning, or by halting him in front of dry goods windows and noting what he says is "nice" or otherwise—what his color-pull is.

Give him his color, but not in excess. Increase it gradually. Then, well, other things being equal, you will see the effect in his eyes, and you'll soon know that it has spread to his heart.
