

Recent Sayings of British Folk.

It has become a commonplace, but a true commonplace, that fear and suspicion are the great enemies of peace.—Viscount Cecil.

One of the most striking facts about this world of ours is that so much of it is uncultivated, unproductive, unoccupied.—General Bramwell Booth.

If we as private citizens in peace are as worthy as our soldiers were in war, there are no problems we cannot solve, no heights of destiny to which we cannot climb.—Stanley M. Bruce, Prime Minister of Australia.

One of the greatest ornaments of the British judicial system is expedition. Nothing is so subversive of public confidence as what Shakespeare called "the law's delay."—Sir Ernest Wild.

It is an extraordinary comment on the intelligence of human beings that a much larger population should be crowded into the streets and squares and slums of London than is to be found within the 3,000,000 square miles covered by Australia.—Harold Cox.

Our duties to posterity include paying our way, but also paying our debt to the past and the future by keeping in order the treasures which we have inherited.—Sir Flinders Petrie.

It is in a great consolidated Protestant church that we alone can meet the onslaught of the various influences at work undermining religion.—Lord Carson.

A one-minute pause after the daily petition, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we are in the habit of forgiving those who trespass against us," would lead to a little more charity.—Rt. Hon. J. H. Whitley, M.P.

Conscientiousness is no trustworthy guarantee of wisdom or intelligence.—The Bishop of Durham.

A person who is happy only when other people make him so strikes me as a rather miserable specimen of the human race.—Principal L. P. Jacks.

Fiftieth Anniversary of First Wheat Shipment.

Very significant was the celebration organized this autumn by the Winnipeg Board of Trade to mark the fiftieth anniversary of the first shipment of wheat from the Canadian West. Wheat had been successfully grown in the Red River valley from 1812 onward but before 1876 only for home consumption. In the latter year there was a serious failure of the spring wheat crop in Ontario, which it was felt was due to the fact that the old Red Fife variety in that province had lost its vigor. The fame of the wheat grown in the Red River valley had begun to spread, and in the autumn a seed merchant of Toronto decided to try to secure 5,000 bushels of wheat for seeding. As railways had not then reached the Canadian West the most expeditious method of travel was to the end of rail at Fisher's Landing on the Red river in Minnesota, and thence by river steamer to Winnipeg. The seedsman arrived in Winnipeg only a day or two before the sailing of the last steamer of the season. In the brief time available he was able to secure only 857 bushels. This was sacked and shipped by steamer to Fisher's Landing, thence by rail to Toronto. At the recent celebration in Winnipeg it was pointed out that the grain movement inaugurated by this tiny consignment of 857 bushels in 1876 had grown to total shipments of nearly 350,000,000 bushels in the crop year 1925-26.

Blue.

What happy chance led me to plant this fax
Gift of a gracious garden-loving friend,
So near the spot where once at least each year
Flits a small butterfly, which surely seems
The chalk down kind, the little Sussex Blue.
Lod all these leagues to my small clump of thyme?
To-day I saw, beneath a turquoise sky, a child with lily-white locks wide-eyed regard
Both flower and butterfly—blue sky, blue wing
Blue blossom and blue eyes astare, as though
The sky had fluttered down in azure flakes
To make this perfect harmony in blue.—Douglas Hurn.

How to Make Ankle Supports.

If your ankles are naturally weak, you will need supports, if you want to skate. One good homespun kind consists of two strips of canvas, one and one-half inches wide and about two yards long. Start wrapping well above the ankle, bringing the strip clockwise around the leg and overlapping about half. Wrap down over the ankle, and when you reach the top of your foot, bring the strip around the instep twice. Then continue it up and around the leg and tuck it under the top strip. When you have faced your shoes over the canvas, you will find your ankles nicely supported. Be sure, though, not to wrap the bandage too tightly, or you'll stop circulation and get a bad case of cold feet.

The Timber Pirate.

Have you come in contact yet with another species of pirate than that found on the high seas? The man who, bent on serving his own interests, makes political appeal to obtain certain choice holdings of timber and then, presto! the man who has a permanent investment in the field finds his choicest fruit taken from beneath his nose. Not content to skim the cream, he leaves the remainder a source of danger from fire to the adjoining timber crops for years. Is there any question of these pseudo settlers ever taking to the land? Investigators say not!

In the first place the land is usually strictly forest land, and in the second place the proximity to forests makes the danger from frosts an impossible farming proposition for years to come.

The pirates fulfill the minimum requirements required for locating, take out the spoliis and say good-bye to the place forever, leaving, as stated before, a fire trap for those whose permanent investment is tied up in the property. Is this honest support of permanent industries?

Classification of lands by capable parties would put an end to this menace and—would prevent this type of timber mining of our forests. This practice is not confined to the East, but is rampant in the West as well.

It brings up the old question of proper classification of lands—an essential step in evolving permanent forest properties where trees would be treated as forest crops, and our forest resources handled for perpetuity.—Canadian Forest and Outdoors.

Further Shipment of Buffalo to North.

During the past summer the Department of the Interior continued the experiment of moving buffalo from the national herd at Wainwright, Alberta, to the great 17,000 square miles of natural feeding grounds known as Wood Buffalo Park near Fort Smith, Northwest Territories. Canada's success in saving the buffalo from extinction is shown by the fact that the national park near Wainwright, which is approximately 15 miles long and 13 miles wide, is not large enough to provide grazing in an average season for a further increase in the herd.

Excepting in a few particulars, the movement was carried out along the same lines as in 1925. The animals were forwarded by rail to Waterways and thence by sloop to the unloading point on the Slave river about seventeen miles south of Fitzgerald.

Eight trips were required to transport the 1,425 yearlings, 492 two-year olds, and 83 three-year olds selected, and the last consignment left Wainwright on August 16 reaching its destination a week later. The entire operations were carried out with only a comparatively few losses. Reports made by the wardens, who for some years have been guarding the wood buffalo and who are now responsible for the new arrivals, indicate that the buffalo shipped last summer have wintered well and are in the best of condition. Quite a number of calves were noticed this year with the buffalo which were sent from Wainwright in 1925; and all the other signs point to the successful issue of this northward transfer of the plains buffalo.

The day passed to late evening.

There came another shower which intensified the illusion.

The men walked faster and the lights became more bright.

It seemed that the town had risen to the sky, and dropped to meet another sky below. A circling heaven with one thin stretch of earth.

Our faces touched the stars.

And now our walk is done.

We tread on carpets in drawing-rooms.

We are just little men again.

Surnames and Their Origin

RAINES.

Variations—Rains, Raynes, Reynes. Racial Origin—English. Source—A locality.

Here is a group of family names the source of which is not at first recognizable because the spelling of the source has changed since the names developed from it.

There is an entry in the records of certain medieval guilds in England referring to "mercerie, canvas, confinian, fastlane, chalons, draps du Raynes and draps de say."

Those who know their modern French will recognize the word "draps" as cloth and the "soye" as the modern "silk" or silk.

"Draps du Raynes" was "cloth of Raynes." Chancer refers to it as cloth of "Raynes."

In the middle ages Raynes, in Britain, was one of the most important commercial and industrial cities of northern France, and was indeed famous for the quality of cloth it produced.

Among the English the name of this city was spelled in various ways, and judging from the fact that most family names developed from foreign cities were borne by merchants, and the fact that Raynes of the Middle Ages was particularly renowned for its commerce, there is little doubt that those who first used it in England were actually merchants, former residents of Raynes, who had settled in England.

Of course the surname at first had a prefix, probably the Norman French "du" or "de," and in its original form was "Thomas of Raines," "Hugo of Raynes," and other similar forms.

It has been claimed, however, that the Clan Murray does not in the strict sense of the term constitute a highland clan. In 1745 it was stated "The Murrays are no clan family, though the duke of Atholl is the head of a number of barons and gentlemen of the name of Murray in the lowlands; but he is deservedly placed here (among the list of highlanders) on account of his extensive following of about 3000 highlanders."

It would seem that these members of the "clan" retained their membership in various other clans, though they lived under the leadership of the Murray chief.

MURRAY.

Variations—MacMurray, Moray.

Racial Origin—Scottish.

Source—A locality.

These family names were originally, and still are, of a Highland clan name and its variations. The Celtic form of the Clan Murray's name is "Siel Mhoiridh" or "Siel Mhoiridh." It is simply derived from the fact that the clan dwelt in that section of Scotland known as Moray.

Strangely enough, however, though the clan is distinctly Celtic, its founder was not. It was founded by the grandson of a Fleming who settled in Scotland during the reign of King David I, and who received from that monarch many favors, including large grants of land. The family founded by Freskin became thoroughly established in the nobility of Scotland, but it was a junior branch, not the senior branch of it, which developed the highland clan of that name. The first chief of the clan Murray was a son of the younger son of this Fleming settler in Scotland.

It has been claimed, however, that the Clan Murray does not in the strict sense of the term constitute a highland clan. In 1745 it was stated "The Murrays are no clan family, though the duke of Atholl is the head of a number of barons and gentlemen of the name of Murray in the lowlands; but he is deservedly placed here (among the list of highlanders) on account of his extensive following of about 3000 highlanders."

It would seem that these members of the "clan" retained their membership in various other clans, though they lived under the leadership of the Murray chief.

Announcement to RED ROSE TEA Enthusiasts

CENTURIES ago, when tea was first introduced to the English Nobility, the precious leaves—then almost priceless—were packed in sealed lead containers.

For many generations lead continued to be used as a protective package for all fine quality teas. Then the modern metal, Aluminum, was introduced. But during war-time and later, paper bags and paper boxes were largely used and have held sway ever since.

In our 30 years experience putting up Red Rose Tea we have used all these containers and each has some particular merit.

But careful tests over a long period prove that Aluminum is by far the best container that has yet been found, and paper packages of every kind the poorest. When in contact with dampness paper absorbs moisture which soon affects the quality of the tea, and in some instances completely spoils it.

Having found the paper package unreliable and uncertain, we have again adopted the Aluminum package which we used years ago. For we know now that Aluminum can be better depended upon than any other.

Unlike paper, Aluminum does not absorb moisture. It preserves all the original flavor and strength. So now and in the future Red Rose Tea will be packed in the Aluminum package, as it was in years gone by.

Some One of Importance.

There's some one of importance Come to live across the street, And you never saw such "going-on." No! you never did indeed.

When the father comes from work at night,

Just on the stroke of eight—

Why, he's like to knock the people down,

In his haste to reach the gate.

Then, running up the garden path,

He waves to window high;

"He must have got a fortune left,"

Said the laughing passers-by.

A fortune left! A fortune left!

Yes! his ship's come sailing in!

There's now a baby in that house.

And there's joy—outside and in.

"Salt of the Earth."

"Ye are the salt of the earth," said the Master to his disciples, using a common figure of speech to describe their function in society. The primary mission of Christianity is discharged without noise. It works most effectively when it is allowed to express itself in its own way. Like true salt, it does not attract notice while it makes its work. Men are influenced by it most deeply when it comes upon them unawares, working in them through the silent energies of the spirit, drawn in devout and faithful men, from whom there issues the vitalizing power which lays hold of all who come in contact with them. So Christianity grows and spreads, transforming men's lives, giving them new visions, and filling them with joyous energy in their obediences to the will of God.

When Christians fail in the zest and spice of faith, they are not merely ineffective, but become actually the source of mischief. But wherever its vigor and tang is felt in a man, his companions cannot ignore it. Contact with those in whom it operates has its inevitable influence.—The Times (London).

Canadian Tree Seeds.

One of the many interesting activities of the Forest Service, Department of the Interior, Canada, is the collection and extraction of tree seeds. Four special seed extraction plants now operate in the western provinces for the purpose of securing seeds from the cones of coniferous trees. During the winter of 1925-26 these four plants extracted twenty-five hundredweight of seeds. Large quantities of seed are supplied to the Forest Service of the British Isles for use in carrying out the program of reforestation in occupied lands in Great Britain. Seed has also been shipped to the Forest Service of New Zealand for a similar reforestation program in that Dominion. In the latter connection it is interesting to note that the New Zealand Forest Service is headed by a Canadian who received his forestry training in Canada.
