An Absent-Minded Statesman.

Monsieur Painleve, the Premier of France, is a famous mathematician as well as a statesman, and he has one characteristic that clearly belongs to his scientific rather than to his political side. That is his absent-mindedness, some entertaining examples of which are told by the Paris correspondent of the London Sunday Times.

The Premier was recently the principal guest at a political dinner at the house of one of his friends, and, though all the other guests had been there for half an hour, nobody was into my hands. In remembering he was M. Painleve the mathematician he had forgotten he was M. Painleve the politician and political guest. But he regained everybody's sympathy by admitting that the problem was difficult. Another adventure of M. Painleve's was to forget the name of his Foreign Minister in full Chamber. On an interpellation he said, "To-morrow may be unsuitable for debate, because my friend Monsieur-" and here he stopped, pointing to M. Briand. Then he tried again, "The ex-Premier, Monsieur-" and he again halted, till, rocking with laughter, a hundred deputies called out, "M. Briand."

The Queen's Guild.

Queen Mary's interest in her poorer subjects is well known but few people realize just how many humble homes have reason to be deeply grateful to her at this time of the year.

For it is now, when the needs of the poor are greatest, that the garments made and collected by Queen Mary's London Needlework Guild are distributed through the medium of various charities.

Queen Mary takes a great interest in the work of the Guild, and personally superintends the unpacking of many of the parcels of garments sent in. She also personally contributes every year six cot-covers in pink, blue, and white wool, which have been crocheted by herself. Needless to say, the mothers who receive these gifts are proud women indeed.

This year Princess Mary has also knitted some warm woollen jumpers for her mother's collection of garments. Altogether, the number of garments sent in was 48,606, as compared with 47,557 in 1925.

------PROFESSOR HUTTON FAVORS EARLY START

Study of Languages Should Begin With Child.

"No civilized country except Canada expects to make language students out of children who are caught so late; possibly Ontario has not expected either." This statement is made by Professor Maurice Hutton in his annual report as Principal of University College, to the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto.

"It has long been the glaring blot upon our secondary schools," declares Professor Hutton, "that they get their entrance pupils two or three or even four years too late. What can the average boy or girl be expected to make of foreign languages, ancient or modern, if they cannot begin them at the natural age for beginning foreign languages (as well as native languages), childhood, from the age of eight or nine years to twelve? At present the majority are nearer fourteen, and never recover the handican of a start so conspicuously belated.

"Any shifting of the first year work (especially first year honor work) back to the schools would reduce," declares Professor Hutton, "the honor graduation standards of this college any such reduction would remove at once the one conspicuous advantage which the University of Toronto possesses over every other university of this continent; the proficiency reached by its honor students at the date of graduation, and the advantage they possess over other graduates in the graduate universities of this continent, in the competition for scholarships, fellowships and, eventually, professor-"It is not by accident that Toronto
