London, England. - "Looking in" by radio may soon become as familiar as "listening in," J. L. Baird believes. Baird, inventor of a television machine, demonstrated his invention recently befre a gathering of scientists. It was imperfect, he admitted, but he expressed confidence that the introduction of certain technical improvements would overcome the defects.

Already the vision of a person has been radioed ten miles, he said, but when the invention is perfected television threatres will be added to the list of public entertainments, and it will be possible in England to watch a baseball game in the United States or a cricket match in Australia.
