The talent was principally local with Mr and Mrs Stewart MacArthur from near Durham assisting, vocally and instrumentally and Prof. Kyle in the same role from Mt Forest. A stunt by the latter was the playing of 'Blue Bells of Scotland' on violin with the bow in his teeth, straight out in front.

The Presbyterians of Durham are to be congratulated on the fine report given last week.

We always like to read "Do you Remember" but we will make it more positive by saying we remember when Lower Town, Durham, was mostly all bush 76 years ago. We remember when two young men, John Erwin and a John McDonald were presentors in the Auld Kirk 65 years ago,—one an Irishman and the other a Canadian Highlandman who led the old Gaelic language in praise to a big churchful of old and young highlanders. The old language is pretty well a thing of the past but to those living (now a few) it brings to memory their younger days when fathers and mothers spoke pleasantly the old language of long ago.

We remember when Fred Armstrong carried the mail on his back from where Dundalk now is, to Durham. We remember getting the Globe in 1858 when it took nearly a week before it reached the readers. But later we remember when coming home from Priceville some nights ago of being somewhat cool, though comfortably seated in a good cutter.

Mrs. David Harrow Called by Death

At her late residence, 466 12th St. West, Owen Sound, the death occurred on Thursday evening last of Rachael Hawke, widow of the late David Harrow, following an illness covering a period of about two years' time. Deceased, while she had been in failing health, was not taken seriously ill until just a few days before, and death was due to pneumonia. She was in her 73rd year, and was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Hawke of Waterloo County, where she was born. In 1881 she was united in marriage to David Harrow, who died in Owen Sound in October last. Until five years ago, when they removed to Owen Sound, they resided north of Priceville.

The late Mrs. Harrow was especially well known in Priceville locality, where she lived for so many years, and was very highly esteemed and beloved by all who knew her. North Egremont: Mr D. McKinnon bears the palm for having already read during the short time in which the Library has been started at Dromore, the greatest number of books, viz. over a dozen. We trust that Dan's known thirst for knowledge, will some day stand him in good stead, as no doubt it will.

Priceville: The other day while Hugh McPherson was cleaning out his well, he came in contact with a huge snake coiled up among the stumps. Hugh retreated when Eve's tempter dared him to come near her and her snakeship will be likely to find winter quarters in the well as Hugh declares he will not tackle it for awhile.
