War Guilt

London Evening News (Ind. Cons.): No kind god has given the German or self as others see it, and it was inevitable that sconer or later Germans should come to look upon war as a sort of massacre of the innocents with themselves as the heroic and high-minded innocents. It has been said that you cannot indict a nation. That is not true, for public opinion throughout the civilized world indicted Germany, and, having carefully examined the evidence, found her guilty. It is true, however, that you cannot force a nation to indict itself, If, in the bitterness of rout and remorse, a desperate cry of "peccavi" goes up the mood of penitence evaporates the moment the sting of defeat and the material evidences of disaster begin to disappear.
