Making out a Cheque Making out a cheque would seem to be a simple matter, yet any banker will tell you that never a day passes but cheques have to be referred back to drawers through mistakes. A person writing a cheque often makes an error in the date or figures. As if to prevent waste, they use a rubber to erase the mistake and write over it. What people seem to forget is that any change made on a cheque must be initialed and if more than one signs the cheque, each signer must initial the alteration.
