

Ski Jumpers Vie At Montreal Jan. 21

Trials Will Decide Dominion's Entries in Olympiad to be Held in Switzerland Montreal Scene of Test

Montreal—The cream of Canada's ski jumpers—and there are none better on this side of the Atlantic—will meet in Montreal on January 21 for one of the most spectacular competitions that the devotee of winter sports could hope to watch; the Olympic trials which will decide Canada's representation in this branch of sport at the Olympiad at St. Moritz, Switzerland. The Canadian Ski Association, governing body of this outdoor sport in Canada, has ordered elimination trials to be held at the famous Cote des Neiges jump on that date, and the best of Canada's ski jumpers will be on hand to strive for the honor of representing their country in the international competitions.

Skilling has had a remarkable growth in popularity in Canada during the last few years, and thriving ski clubs are found in Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and other Canadian cities. Ottawa, in fact, has one ski club which has the largest membership of any such body in the world, and each Sunday sees thousands of ski devotees trailing out from the capital to the Gatineau Hills, which lie within a few miles of the city.

Montreal is particularly fortunate in this regard also, since within the confines of the city there is Mount Royal, whose steep slopes afford excellent ski hills. Every day in winter finds hundreds of Montrealers and visitors out on the mountain or skiing and other winter sports. The Cote des Neiges jump, where the Olympic elimination contests are to be held, is on the northwest side of the mountain, and is reached within a fifteen-minute drive from any of the hotels in the city. The visitor has his choice of either horse-drawn sleighs, taxis or street cars to the jump.

That there will be plenty of both thrills and spills is assured, for the Cote des Neiges hill is one of the most spectacular on the continent, and each year, when the Canadian championships are decided, produces some record jumping.

Canada will send two jumpers and two runners to St. Moritz for the international competitions, and each club affiliated with the Canadian Ski Association has been invited to send representatives to the elimination trials, which will enable selection of the best men to represent Canada for the world's championships. This will be the first time that Canada has been represented in skiing competitions at the Olympiad and the first time that Olympic trials for skiers have been held in the Dominion.

At the Olympiad there will be three events for skiers. Races will be run over distances of twelve and fifty miles, respectively, and there will also be the jumping competitions. Canada will be entered in the jumping and in the twelve-mile cross-country race. No entries are being made in the fifty-mile cross-country event, since Canadian skiers do not train for such a strenuous contest.

Japanese Novel in Serial Form Still Running After 12 Years

Tokyo.—A novel that has been running serially for the past 12 years, and that is not yet completed, is holding the attention of a large section of the Japanese public. The novel, which is called "Dai Bosatsu Toge," has already reached 25 volumes, thus surpassing the previous record in this country in point of size.

Its author, Kazan Nakazato, was the recipient of an enthusiastic demonstration at Osaka, organized by a society devoted to the reading of the novel and numbering among its members some of Japan's greatest writers and poets.

The book deals with men and women living some years before the Imperial Restoration of 1868, and is in reality an exhaustive study of the characters and conditions of that period in the nation's life. It has no one hero or heroine.

When, 12 years ago, Mr. Nakazato first began to write it he adopted an original and modern style, departing from that of the classicists, which created a sensation in Japan's literary world.

No date has been set for its ending, nor has any limitation of its size been announced.

ROOSEVELT'S MOOSE IN NEW ZEALAND

Moose, the descendants of the animals presented by the late President Roosevelt, are increasing in the region of Dusky Sound, Southland. Two experienced stalkers who trekked through that district recently have reported that the herd is well established. Several moose were seen at close range, and there was ample evidence of many more in the sporadic of the cropped scrub. So close did the observers get that they were able to take photographs of two well-grown bulls—a twelve-pointer and an eleven-pointer—which were standing in a stream drinking. These two hefty beasts were under observation for about a quarter of an hour before they became aware of the nearness of human beings.

OWL-LAFFS

Footprints. Children getting on a street car. Should be made to wipe their feet. Or they'll always leave behind them Footprints on the trolley seat.

"Why, Mac, you've lost your stater!" "Ay. A've ben doin' a lot o' long distance telephonin' lately."

Some men are down and out and others are low down and in. Give to be happy—nothing else matters very much.

Speaking of the high cost of living, the old fashioned dime novel is now a dollar and a half, postage extra.

The world is amused rather than impressed by the man who doesn't know when he's beaten.

Hell may be paved with good intentions, but who wants to go there to find out?

"Motor cars have been increasing by leaps and bounds, and the pedestrians have been surviving by the same means."

Revivalist—"Ah, my brethren, here the church stands, offering to save you, and what will be your answer?" Voice in the Rear—"Women and children first!"

A scientist says the earth is a million years old. Wonder how long before it will be old enough to know better?

Why don't they make hinged windshields for drivers to go through without breaking the glasses?

Irate Customer—"Say, you cheated me!" Grocer—"What do you mean?" Customer—"Why, darn it, man, I ordered Irish potatoes but your driver said the potatoes he brought to the house were grown in the suburbs."

A doctor declares that kissing shortens life, but we suppose there will continue to be those who prefer a short life and a merry one.

Hostess—"What's the idea of bringing two boy friends with you?" Guest—"Oh, I always carry a spare."

"Are you a doctor?" asked a lady tourist of a young man at the soda fountain in a local drug store. "No, madam, I'm just a frizzician."

Resolved: That henceforth I'll endeavor not to nag. Nor ever show unreasoning heat; I'll not allow the corners of my mouth to sag. For I look better when I'm sweet.

And furthermore, my tongue shall not in gossip wag About my neighbor, or his wife; I'll keep my work up as I should, not let it drag. Since it's a vital thing in life.

My care for simple, worthwhile things shall never lag; I'll try to keep my ideals high; Of all these things I hope to do I will not brag. Nor boast—I simply say, "I'll try."

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS USE NO OTHER MEDICINE

Baby's Own Tablets Are the Ideal Remedy for Babies and Young Children

Canadian mothers are noted for the care they give their little ones—the health of the baby is most jealously guarded and the mother is always on the lookout for a remedy which is sufficient and at the same time absolutely safe. Thousands of mothers have found such a remedy in Baby's Own Tablets and many of them use nothing else for the ailments of their little ones. Among them is Mrs. Howard King, of Truro, N.S., who says:—"I can strongly recommend Baby's Own Tablets to mothers of young children as I know of nothing to equal them for little ones."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Young son (to shoe clerk waiting upon his fastidious mother): "No use showing her the first ten pairs—she won't take 'em."

THE BEST MEDICINE SHE EVER USED

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Highly Praised by a Quebec Lady.

Mrs. David Logan, Thetford Mines West, Que., gives unstinted praise to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for the good they have done in her family. Mrs. Logan says:—"I have been a user of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for many years, as occasion required, and have always found them a most reliable medicine. My husband, who was recovering from an attack of typhoid fever, and was in a very weak condition, took the pills, and through them gained health and strength. My daughter was in a run-down condition, and was forced to discontinue work. Again Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were resorted to and she was soon restored to excellent health. Then my eldest boy had an operation performed for adenoids, which left him in a weakened condition. Once more Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were tried, and he was soon in excellent health. So I can truly say that more than satisfaction has been obtained by the use of this medicine. The pills have done more good in my house than hundreds of dollars worth of more expensive medicines."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills assist digestion, correct the lassitude, the palpitation of the heart, shaky nerves and the pallor of the face and lips that are the results of thin, impure blood.

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer, or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Ford's Other Industry

Airmen Asking If Ford Plane Is to Follow New Model Car

Washington.—The American aviation industry, as represented at the first general conference in session here under auspices of the Commerce Department, is asking whether a new Ford airplane will follow the new Ford car.

According to William B. Stout, general manager of the Stout Airplane Corporation, a subsidiary of the Ford Company, who was at the conference, the Ford airport at Detroit is second only in size to the great Tempelhof Field outside of Berlin, and proposals for the coming year will see it the largest in the world. The Ford airplanes are all metal. So far the automobile manufacturer has not gone into airplane engine production, but is using Wright whirlwind motors in his 10-passenger machines, making round trips daily, in good or bad weather, to Cleveland, Buffalo and Chicago. Emphasis is put on regularity, reliability and precision of performance.

Those closest to Mr. Ford declare his whole purpose so far has been to carry out a first-hand test to satisfy himself of what modern aviation really holds for industry. He is doing this on the largest scale yet attempted by a private individual. Even those who know him best are not prepared to forecast how soon he will throw the full weight of his resources into the airplane industry.

There has been but one accident in a Ford airplane to date. This one was not due to faulty aeronautical construction, but to a cyclone, which wrecked a schoolhouse, in addition to injuring the machine. The smooth performance has been kept up with the present 14 airplanes now operated.

"I will not forecast what Mr. Ford will do in aviation," said Mr. Stout. "There is only one man who can ever speak for Mr. Ford's plans, and that is Henry Ford himself."

Mr. Stout, pilot of the Ford venture in the air, is a mechanical engineer who at one time was head of the Packard Motor Company's aeronautical branch. He believes the airplanes of the future will be all metal. His corporation joined the Ford group and manufacture has continued on this basis.

Mr. Stout founded Aerial Age, was chief engineer in designing a new car for the Scripps-Booth Company, Detroit, and diversified his already complex experiences by designing an all-metal torpedo airplane for the navy. He is the author, too, of a boy's book on mechanical models, and has been a technical adviser to the Aircraft Board, Washington.

"Why doesn't Ford make his own airplane engines?" one of the men familiar with Mr. Ford's interest in aviation was recently asked at the aeronautical conference.

"Give him a chance; don't you know he has been busy the past year getting out a new model?" was the reply.

Aid to Ford Memory. Young Zoologist (who has been asked to lecture over the wireless): "And all the time, darling, though millions may be listening in, I shall be thinking of you alone."

Darling—"And what's your lecture about, old thing?" Young Zoologist—"Freaks of nature."—Punch.

World Famous Bronze Buddha is the Dalai Lama, shown above, favorite deity of the Japanese, standing 49 feet high. It is made entirely of bronze except the pedestal, this being of stone inscribed with the fanciful words of visiting believers. At a level with the covered feet of the statue can be seen a container wherein a few joss sticks are thrown. As the sweet-smelling smoke curls toward the huge head the worshipper kneels upon the stone, chanting the prayers carved upon a slab of stone nearby.

DEAN INGE CORRECTS ERRORS IN SAYINGS CREDITED FAMOUS

Gloomy Dean Reviews Epigrams, So Often Quoted, to Arrive at Source

MISTAKES PLENTIFUL

What is originality? Undetected plagiarism. This is probably itself a plagiarism, but I cannot remember who said it before me. If originality means thinking for oneself, and not thinking differently from other people, a man does not forfeit his claim to it by saying things which have occurred to others, writes Dean Inge in the London Evening Standard.

In fact, when we consider that millions of people have been thinking, talking and writing for thousands of years, it is not likely that anyone should hit upon anything entirely fresh, unless he is inspired to utter something either transcendently wise or most abnormally foolish.

Still, some writers have, or deserve to have, a special reputation as pickers up of unconsidered trifles; they rival the noble-minded Antiochus, who, according to Homer excelled all other men in thieving and the use of the oath.

"What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" asks St. Paul. It is a good corrective of vanity to reflect how completely we are the children of our age, and how most of the giants in each generation are men of moderate size, standing on the shoulders of those who have lived before them. Nine-tenths of what we call progress is simply the accumulation of tradition—recorded trials and errors, and a few lucky shots.

When we talk of literary plagiarisms we think, not of whole systems of thought, which may be lifted with impunity, but of neat sayings, preserved for their wit and wisdom. It is tempting to introduce one or two of these to brighten our own arguments, without spoiling the sentence by the chilling parenthesis, "as So-and-so said." An excess of honesty, expressing itself between brackets or in footnotes, makes Jack a dull boy.

Unverified Epigrams. I have collected a good many of these appropriations, some of which may be mere coincidences. My first is given by the poet, which are constantly quoted with the names of their supposed authors, but which there is no reason to suppose were uttered by their supposed authors at all. These are not strictly plagiarisms, but they illustrate the love of quoting epigrams without verifying them.

Plato never said, "God geometrizes." William of Ockham (I think) never said, "Ultimates (entia) are not to be multiplied unnecessarily." Numenius is not likely to have called Plato "an Attic Moses." Julian can hardly have said on his death-bed, "Thou hast conquered, O Galilee!" Even that gallant but not very intelligent pedant must have realized that the so-called Conversion of Rome in the fourth century was a victory of the Catholic Church over the Empire, not at all a victory of "the Galilean" over the forces which brought Him to the Cross.

Kosciusko did not say, "The end of Poland." The Baron de Cambronne did not say at Waterloo, "The Guard dies, but does not surrender." Cambronne himself, twenty years later, disavowed the saying, and added with great honesty, "In the first place, we upon our Empire?" It seems to have been first used of the immense empire of Spain, and Napoleon, when he proposed to "unite Spain for ever to the destinies of France," quoted the proverb of Spain. A Frenchman, after some years' residence in England, said that as applied to the centre of the British Empire, "the expression is of course purely metaphorical."

Another of Napoleon's annexations is the saying that there is only one step from the sublime to the ridiculous. It seems to occur first in Montaigne, and then in the notorious Tom Paine, the Englishman, from whom Bonaparte probably got it. He kept on repeating it during the retreat from Moscow, of which his unlucky Grand Army probably failed to see the comic side.

An epigram which has had a queer history is: "No one is a hero to his valet de chambre." Several French writers, including Montaigne, are quoted as having said something like it. But the epigram is possibly improved when we add: "This, however, is not a hero, but because the valet is a valet." In this form it was first written by Hegel (in his Philosophie des Geschichte, p. 40). Goethe borrowed it from Hegel, Carlyle from Goethe, and Disraeli, a great collector of other men's good things, from Carlyle. The epigram is, however, equally unfair to heroes and to valets.

"The Cup That Cheers" A few miscellaneous plagiarisms may be added. Gray's "E'en in our ashes live their wonted fires," comes from Chaucer, "Yet in our ashes cold is fire broken." "The cup that cheers but not inebriates," is used by Cowper of tea. But it comes from Bishop Berkeley, who uses it of tar-water, which "is of a nature so mild and benign and proportioned to the human constitution, as to warm without heating, to cheer but not inebriate."

This is from the Sirls, a treatise which is divided between the merits of tar-water and those of the Neoplatonic philosophy. I agree with the latter; tar-water I have never tried.

"He who fights and runs away may live to fight another day," which we know as Goldsmith's, is from ancient Greece, and "We have given hostages to fortune" is from Lucan: "aedimus tot pignora fatis."

It looks as if an industrious investigator might hunt down all our good things, and dispute our rights in them. But there is an almost unexplored field or judicious annexation in the proverbs of China. A few specimens will show how useful they may be. "Do not remove a fly from your friend's forehead with a hatchet," "No needle is sharp at both ends," "Free sitters grumble most at a play," "You can't clap hands with one palm," "A maker of idols is never an idolator," "He who rides on a tiger can never dismount" (a warning to revolutionists.) "One dog barks at another's tail," "When the rest bark at him," "When a neighbor is in your fruit garden, inattention is the truest politeness," "Everyone pushes a falling fence."

New Discovery in Cancer Campaign

British Doctor Accomplishes Remarkable Cures of Infected Rats

London.—Valuable addition to the campaign against cancer is described in this week's "Lancet" by Dr. Thomas Lumsden, who has accomplished some remarkable cures of cancer in rats. Dr. Lumsden conducts his research work in the Lister Institute under a grant from the British Empire Cancer Campaign.

He says his experiments prove that the body of the victim develops a resistance to the cancer infection but usually too late to resist its spread. His idea is to force the cancer to reveal itself earlier in the stage of its development. For this purpose he injects into the growth a solution of formalin which has a destructive effect upon the cancer cells. During this year he has treated tumors in 70 rats and has cured 54. Of 25 rats similarly treated since October, last 24 have been cured.

Usefulness of Maps

People Are Realizing More and More Their Value

When the art of printing was first utilized for the publication of books only a small proportion of the population in any of the then civilized countries of the world could read and in fact it was a long time afterwards before people generally could use books for themselves. Nowadays more books are being sold than ever before, but people buy them for education and use. With better general education the greater is the demand for books of all kinds. The same may be said to be true of maps; as more people learn to use them so does the demand increase; and it is equally true that one must learn to read a map and be able to use it, just as one must learn to read words before the printed page is of any significance. A map is not a word picture, nor is it a photograph, although it contains elements of both. Especially is this true of the topographic map which is the most complete example of the map-maker's skill and serves many purposes. It is the record of the natural and cultural features of any area, and one of the means of aiding development. Such a map shows the arable lands; industrial areas; forest areas; mineral areas; water power sites and storage basins; reclamation projects; irrigation areas; surface conformation, etc.

One of the large map-making organizations of the Dominion Government is the Topographical Survey, Department of the Interior. During recent years this service has been issuing as rapidly as possible topographic maps of various areas throughout Canada, all being co-ordinated in the National Topographic series. Thus, eventually the whole country will be mapped without overlapping or without any part being missing. Mapping is, however, a slow process and it will be many years before the whole country will be thus included. As each new map is issued more people are interested. In order to inform people of the maps that are available an index of the maps and publications issued by the Topographical Survey will be sent free upon request.

A constant reader of the political news for these last several years, we are ready to provide the first sentence of a two-sentence American Political Tragedy: "Once upon a time there were several American statesmen with convictions they were willing to stake their careers on." The only convictions among the present-day politicians are those handed down in the criminal courts.
