The old year has gone with its mistakes and follies, its sorrows and joys—the days well spent or wasted are irrevocable, but a New Year lies ahead with bright and unsullied moments. Happy New Year is all in all to the front at this beginning of 1928, like all its predecessors. Quite proper in its place and fine, but after all is said and done, the amount of happiness obtained depends largely on the amount we are willing to put into this old world to make it a little better, rather than the amount we can grab out of it.

LOVE

When the First Great Cause of all things Left man to evolve with time, He built in a lesser body— A fragment of Love Divine, To follow man through the ages Of sorrowing and despair, And guard him with selfless courage His life and his lot to share. To give to the poorest beggar— A love that makes him a king, And kiss the hand which is empty— When fortune and friends take wing. As a name for this rare being, Reflecting the love of God, Man spelt his Creator backward, And called His small likeness—dog.
