Merely a Neighborly Game

"Wish It Had Been Calcutta Sweepstakes," He Muses

Some of the emotions that come to a man who draws a royal flush in a poker game are recounted recently by a man named Wyatt whose cards built themselves into one of those coveted hands in a neighborly game of draw. He drew the flush when he hadn't the slightest desire for such a the Apostle who preached, dled bit of luck, which only goes to show, he asserts, that some persons become famous without intent.

The noises that it brought into his head, he relates, sounded something like opportunity knocking at his skull with the upper side of South America. If it had only been a Calcutta Sweepthe Apostle whom 20 church stakes or a five-horse "parlay" or something, he mused. that the first British church bore "I thought the public might like to the name "The Secret of our know the details," confided Mr. Wyatt, "because some people like to gather information like this. I knew a fellow once who kept packing his head

Anyhow, he related that it happened at the home of Robert M. Taylor, a few doors from the Wyatt household, and there were Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Wyatt and Dr. Forrest E. Chick and Mrs. Chick.

"And it's funny it didn't rain," he commented. "I rarely play except on rainy nights because I can win only on rainy nights. I expected it to rain, but there you are again. It only goes to show you never can tell when it's

Pot Was Growing Bigger

Well, this particular pot had been passed several times, the five-cent antes had grown to 30 cents, and he felt he ought to get into it with anything for the percentage.

"Mrs. Taylor smiled," he went on. "She always smiled when she was happy, and I knew she had something. At it turned out she had three nines, and she opened the pot with a 10-cent bet. Dr. Chick yawned and stretched his left arm high in the air as if he were very tired and and nounced in a lazy way that he would drag along. How different people are! That was the doctor's way of showing that he had a swell hand. As it turned out he had a pat hand-a full house, full of kings. The others passed and it came to me.

Kept Jack and Ace of Hearts

"I had nothing, but there was the 60 cents in the pot and I decided to hang on. I kept an ace and jack of hearts and called for three cards. I drew a ten, queen and king of hearts, giving me a royal flush.

"Why, I only wanted a pair of kings or three jacks or something like that. Which only goes to show that you never can tell from what you want what you are going to get.

"Well, Mrs. Taylor bet and Dr. Chick raised on his pat full house, and as I went to pick up a few nickels to get into the fight my wife kept urging me not to be foolish and throw away money like that. Well, the money went in and then there were a few raises and Mrs. Taylor dropped out. Dr. Chick began to smile knowingly and said he would keep it up all night if necessary. "And then, you know how fellows act in a poker game. I told him he couldn't bluff me, that, after all, thought two good pair could beat him and would prove it. Well, there was talk back and forth until the pot was piled up to $3. The doctor seemed persistent and my wife whispered that I was turning out a bigger fool than she thought I was. "Well, when it looked as though the thing was going to keep up as long as the Democratic convention I suggested that perhaps the doctor would have patients waiting for him and that he ought to get away and, therefore, I called-called, mind you, with a royal flush. Another reason why I called was because I just had to let the party see as quick as possible what I had in my hand. Of course, I gobbled up the $3 in nickels, tore up the rest of the cards and put my royal flush in a frame. What a game!"

Empire and Foreign Policy

Arthur Ponsonby, M.P., in Manchester Guardian (Lib.): No method for the prompt ascertainment of Empire opinion has been discovered. To supply information alone requires time and immense trouble; for consultation there is no machinery except the cumbrous interchange of correspondence: while consent and approval involved the further reference of questions to Dominion Parliaments. Yet the point at issue may be one the decision of which must of necessity be reached in days, if not hours.
