Care in Raising Chicks Visitors to the Silver Maple Poultry Farm at Westport, N.Y., find several pairs of rubber overshoes in a box near the walks that lead to the brooder houses. The rubbers must be worn by the poultrymen and, as an added precaution, it is necessary for the wearer to step in a box containing a disinfectant before entering the brooder house, according to Ira J. Hollar of the New York State College of Agriculture. The brooder houses are swept, scraped, scrubbed with lye and water, disinfected with a 5 per cent. coal-tar disinfectant, and then a fire torch was used on the floors and walls before placing the chicks in the house. The brooding equipment had the same

Mr. Robert Gray, manager of the farm, has had experience with losses of chicks, of mature pullets and in fewer eggs from coccidiosis, and has outlined strict sanitation practices to avoid further outbreaks. After the chicks are placed in the brooder house, fresh litter is placed under the hover daily and all litter is changed every five days. When the litter is changed a torch is used to dry the floor and destroy any coccidiosis germs which may be present. The chicks are fed an all-mash ration regularly at 8 o'clock in the morning, at noon and at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Dr. Gray plans that the chicks be without feed at least an hour between feeds so the chicks' intestines may have a short rest period.
