That evening it chanced that I dined at a home where the three-year-old boy is the only child.

He had his own chair and low table near his mother's place, and was served in courses like t'e grown ups, but with special food. His milk-tomato soup was followed by a poached egg on toast, which he managed dexterously, then a dish of stewed prunes with an oatmeal cookie, and a small cup of properly cooked cocoa. A spoonful of strawberry ice-cream was a festive finish.

He was quiet during dinner and polite to the maid-one scarcely knew he was present.

Before getting ready for dinner he had had a merry romp in the hall with his father, and after dinner his mother told him his regular good-night story. Then he went to bed happily.

It was all so restful, so altogether satisfactory.-Issued by the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West 40th Street, New York City. These articles are appearing weekly in our columns.

Water Hemlock Declared Deadly by Scientists

Children should beware of the deadpoisonous hemlock or water hemlock weed, which is sometimes mistaken by them for wild parsnip during the Spring and early Summer, warns both Dr. L. W. Durrell, botanist, and Dr. George H. Glover, veterinarian, at the Colorado Agricultural College Experiment Station, in a recent bulletin.

Keep live stock away from ditch banks or swampy places where this dangerous plant grows, and caution children against tasting any parsnip-like plants," Dr. Durrell warns. "Poison hemlock is a tall perennial weed growing three to six feet tall, with a hollow, smooth stem, and characteristic thick bunch of spindleshaped roots. When these roots are cut a yellow juice cozes out. grows throughout the State, up to an elevation of 8,000 feet above sea level. The entire plant is poison-

"Poisoned animals suffer convulalons and die in great agony. Death occurs in a very short time. A small piece of root the size of a person's finger has been known to kill a horse within an hour.

"No antidote is known, but animals or persons poisoned should be given raw linseed oil or potassium permanganate in solution with water. Any remedy that will empty the stomach should be quickly used.

Jim Hatherton was right in the middle of his final examinations at Varsity when as he said himself something snapped and he was just a bundle of nerves. He went to a doctor and told his story. The medical man, not so long out of university himself asked a good many questions about Jim's examination and his home folks.

Finally he said "You sit right down here at my telephone and call up your mother and ple. But if you are too fat, and want have a real good chat. I know you write every week and all that, but just have a good chat to reduce, it's a good principle to and don't hurry for it will not cost much anyway."

Jim did more than that; he called his home every evening from his rooms while the exams were on. The sound of his mother's voice seemed to be just the tonic he needed.
