His fine kind ly manner will be missed in the community and in the church where he was a regular attendant at church services. He held the position of Church Treasurer for many years. He was in his 70th year (in the month of April completed.) A fine service was held by Rev W. Bartlett, his pastor, who in ing his comforting discourse refered to the conversation he had with deceased before he took ill, on the fading life of humanity. Mr McLean comparing it to the fallen leaves which reminds us that life passes very quickly. "We all do fade as a leaf" was the text suggested. Inspiration and hope, rather than depression may be taken from the fact that the leaf's ministry is not ended, but forms mold for other plants followbenefits succeeding generations. Leaves have their greatest charm when dying, life is often at its loveliest when attaining the sere, and all its gorgeous colors. The solemn message of the fading leaf bids all to prepare. His eyes grew dim as he looked back on the sorrowing, but brightened as he looked forward to the bliss beyond, with our eyes opened to the Rev W H Bartlett on Sunday last, preached two fine sermons: in the morning on the 'Sin of Indifference to the higher things of life.' A whole life is very often scarred by tragedy through the indifference of the parents, affecting all churches throughout the land. Social evils, arug and white slave traffic all resulted from indifference. The futility of retrenchment was pointed out in time of peace, at the same time expending on armaments. No government is a substitute for personal obligations it was pointed out.
