Bachelor Safe in London "London," said Sir Charles Biron,

the retiring bachelor Chief Magistrate of London, to the reporters as he disembarked from a Cape Town steamer at Southampton the other day, "is the only place in the worki for a bachelor, and my friend McCarcie, the so-called 'Bachelor Judge' of the King's Bench, will agree with me.

"For one thing, if we ever find ourselves at bay in Hyd Park, or other exotic places, one of our splendid policemen is always at hand and all danger of captivity disappears.

"In the United States detached males are ruthlessly hunted down, because, after a special treatment, they make excellent doormats. And in other countries where they are not scalped early they are regarded as drones, and as such a legitimate object of legislation (vide Mussolini's bachelor

"Only in England, and particularly in London, can the bachelor flourish with a maxin um of popularity and a minimum of responsibility. He can make arbitrary selections from the riot of invitations which blossom like hardy annuals along his mantelpiece. He can make excuses inspired by Aesop; he can wear plus fours at first nights, and hostesses still toss up to decide who shall entertain him on Monday week.

"Yet not one of them would dare aroon him in the conservatory with her daughter. Such a suggestion of liability would drve him straight on to some other hostess's register. The London bachelor can do no wrongexcept get married."
