

The Flying Courier

by Boyd Cable

CHAPTER XIII

Glyn Elman, a pilot of Imperial Airways is travelling as a special Flying Courier by the Air Mail to India carrying two copies of a talking film of the Prince of Naurah, which is most urgent shall reach there safely. The Prince is in London. Too ill to travel and the talking film sent to foil the efforts of THE VULTURE, his half-brother, in India.

On the same mail line travels Norah Seaman, a girl Glyn had met only a week before. Stefan, Max and the agents of the Vulture are foiled in several attempts, but at Gallies the attack case in which Glyn carries one film is stolen. Next morning after the liner has left Gallies, Stefan and Max, who have stayed behind, thinking their work finished, learn that two copies are carried by the Courier Stefan hires a small plane and hopes to catch the liner, but engine trouble develops and they leave without him.

Glyn is again attacked by Naurah. Glyn is ordered by the Prince to reward the man assisting him at Athens. He has a special check made and gives the key to Norah. At Shargah he stays aboard the plane. The Indian passenger bribes a waiter to locate where Glyn keeps the film on his person.

Instantly the Indian heard a movement in the room, and a question, first in Arabic and then in English, "Who is there?" He disappeared from the corridor like a ghost; and when an armed policeman opened the door a moment later, the passage was empty. He shut locked the door again, and sat down with his eye on the handle and key.

While this was going on, Glyn, with the connivance of Norah, was probing Jimmy Doyle gently as to his tastes and inclination, hoping to gather some indication of what sort of present would be most acceptable as a "suitable reward" from the Prince.

But the problem was less easy of solution than Glyn had hoped, Jimmy was frankness itself about his doings and future ambitions. He had been through Public School, and had everything planned to go to the University, until the 'depression' period had hit his people's business (like many others) and all plans for taking a degree and studying fir Law, with the usual protracted period as briefless barrister had proved to be "Lucked in the dice."

"I know how lucky I am," said Jimmy reflectively, "that the pater was able to use influence with a friend and get me the job in the Bombay office I'm bound for now. It's dashed ungrateful of me, of course, but I don't mind admitting scrap, and I loathe the thought of an office job anywhere. But needs must, he concluded cheerfully, "and maybe I'll get a chance to sweat some Indian law, and work up into some legal side of the business I'm going to—if it has one."

He was keen on athletics and sports of various kinds. "Motor biking?" said Glyn hopefully and trying to decide whether the price of a little motor cycle would be beyond the Prince's conception of a reward. "Not me," said Jimmy promptly, "I've no hanker at all for any sort of motors, or mechanics of any kind." Glyn sighed, and tried to think of a reasonable expensive "reward" that would fit with Jimmy's sports and games, but could think of nothing in the shape of Rugger or boating or cross-country carrier outfits that would qualify; and somehow, right kind of reward.

"Is University very expensive, Jimmy?" Norah asked casually. "Dunno about some fellows," answered Jimmy, "but pater and I had it all figured out that twelve to fifteen hundred pounds was to see me through and give me a start in law—that, and any bit I could make on the side in freelance journalism.

By the way, d'you happen to know if there is any market in India for freelance stuff. I've had a few articles accepted in—"Typewriter," Glyn exploded suddenly. "Journalists use typewriters, don't they? Machines, I mean; not girls."

"Some do," said Jimmy, "but not me, thanks. More beastly machinery. Yes, of course," sighed Glyn, regretfully thinking how perfectly a typewriter could have been made to fit — whole choice of costs.

"Well, I'm going to bed, Norah said suddenly rising. Glyn looked at her reproachfully. "This is rank desertion," he said meaningly, but she only laughed lightly. He walked across room with her to open the door.

"You might have struck on a bit until we pumped out something that would square with this reward business," he grumbled.

"Silly," she said. "I've got all we need to know. I'll tell you about it tomorrow. Just one thing. Get his father's address. Say you might look him up one day when you get back."

It was a good hour later when Glyn and Jimmy Doyle started off to bed. Jimmy went first while Glyn saw to certain arrangements he had made for the night. Jimmy's room next to Glyn's, towards the middle of the line of bedroom doors opening off the corridor. As he turned the key into the lock, he did not notice that one of the first doors was open an inch or two, and could not see that in the darkness of the room inside that door, the gleaming eyes of the Indian Dass were peering out at him.

The watcher let him pass, and waited with his eyes set on the corner turning into the corridor. In his right hand he held a straight-bladed knife, and hanging from his wrist by a foot-long string, dangled a padlock key; and in his left hand he held the door-handle, and a long noosed cord of silk — the dreaded strangling cord of the "Thugee," the cord which, when dropped over the head of the victim and drawn tight with a jerk, chokes, to silence, or the faintest gasp and gurgle, the last breath that can be drawn or expelled. The Indian plottor was striking almost all on this last throw—the throw of the silken cord, backed with the thrust of a knife if it were needed to hasten the work. But he was handling tools he knew, tools that had served the caste of Thugs in India for centuries and had rarely failed in the hands of the experts.

The creak of European shoes, and soft stamp of their heels came to the watcher. Swiftly, with his eyes on the corridor corner, he shifted the knife to hold it in his teeth, took the cord in both hands and ran it smoothly through his steady fingers. As he caught the first glimpse of Glyn's figure swinging round the corner into the corridor, he closed the door silently and held it ready to swing open on smooth and well oiled hinges.

He heard soft feet come towards opposite to, past his door; counted ten paces of their passing—ten paces that would be equal to five strides on his following bare foot-soles, as

Exercise, Right Food Holiday Substitutes

If You Have That Tired Feeling and Can't Get Away, This Advice May Help

Along about this time of year, vitality is at a low ebb and a girl's reflection in the mirror isn't apt to please her. Her complexion seems to be grayish, tired lines appear around mouth and eyes, her neck is stiff when she wakes up in the morning. Something must be done, of course. No one wants to go on feeling out of sorts and looking tired and wan. A vacation probably is the most effective way of getting rid of "spring fever." If you possibly can, take a trip somewhere and get away from the typewriter, sewing machine, children or what have you. You'll be surprised at what one short week will do for your disposition and your looks as well.

However, if you're one of those people who never seem to be able to take a vacation, substitute exercise, the right food and some home beauty treatments for a holiday in the country or on a boat. They're inexpensive substitutes and really quite pleasant.

First, make sure that your drinking ten glasses of water each day, a dash of lemon juice when you get up in the morning. Walk to the office or, if your work is confined to the home, take a brisk walk as soon as the morning's housework is done. Get ten hours sleep every night and do some setting-up exercises when you get out of bed.

New Argument About A Political Career

ALBANY, N.Y.—There is no doubt but that a legislative career agrees with Miss Doris Byrne, only woman member of the New York Legislature. She has gained six pounds.

"Really, I'm getting worried about it," declared the comely young Bronx Democrat. "My only hope is that I'll lose it all in the excitement of trying to get re-elected this fall."

Silver Jubilee

Great Britain, India and the British Dominions lay plans for King George's silver jubilee one year hence. May 6th, 1935, is expected to usher in a celebration equalling Queen Victoria's golden jubilee in 1887. Since the union of the crowns of England and Scotland 13 sovereigns have sat upon the throne, only four of them longer than George V. All ways popular, the great war and the great depression afforded real opportunities to which this democratic ruler rose.

The Smart Bedroom Is Done In Modern or Classic Manner

Naturally you want your bedroom to convey an impression of peace and repose. But whether you furnish it in modern style or use some of the lovely adaptations of period pieces depends entirely upon your individual taste.

A walk through the furniture shops or departments of any of the fine modern stores will furnish you with plenty of inspiration. You will see fine woods wrought with skillful craftsmanship into pieces of rare and enduring beauty. Pieces that you will be proud to own and to hand down to our children. For one of the outstanding characteristics of the new furniture is that it is soundly and substantially made. If the modern trend has done nothing else, at least it has re-established a regard for value and lasting worth in furniture. For it is a type of furniture that admits of no slighting in construction. Everything must be sound and substantial.

SIMPLE, RESTFUL DESIGNS

One of the most distinguished of the modern bedroom suites was modern in inspiration. The pieces were made of beautifully matched woods—the grain of the wood forming an important integral part of the design. The twin beds had plain head and footboards with the grain meeting in the middle to form an effective pattern. The beds and each piece in the set were outlined in ebony. The drawer pulls were formed of oblong blocks of richly polished wood. The large round mirror over the dressing table was set in a black ebony base—the top entirely without a frame. Above the mirror a long cylindrical light of frosted glass was fastened giving a clear bright illumination for make-up. Another dressing table, also in the modern manner was illumined by indirect lighting—the bulbs set into the top of the table, throwing the light upward and directly on the face so that there were no shadows—a very important feature as every woman who has struggled with old-fashioned methods of illumination can tell you.

Low triangular or square stools are used before the dressing tables. An especially notable feature in bedroom furniture of modern design is the efficient way the chests of drawers are designed. Any man will delight in the easy sliding drawers that open to display large storage place for masculine belongings.

ADDITIONAL BEDROOM PIECES. If you are doing your bedroom in the modern manner you'll be fascinated by a lovely chaise longue upholstered in soft beige fur fabric. It

Porridge Stays On Menu Till Summer

LONDON, Eng.—All is well again in the County Council institution in Fulham road. Porridge is to remain on the breakfast menu until summer.

There was pandemonium at the home when the master introduced a new tray cut out the porridge. The chairman of the L.C.C. Central Committee controlling the institution and a public assistance officer went around and smoothed the ruffled inmates.

They also decided that objectors need not say grace before meals or prayers in the morning and evening.

Ease Pain, Headache in Few Minutes

For Quick Relief Say ASPIRIN—When You Buy

Now comes amazingly quick relief from headaches, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia . . . the fastest safe relief, it is said, yet discovered. Those results are due to a scientific discovery by which an Aspirin Tablet begins to dissolve, or disintegrate, in the amazing space of two seconds after touching moisture. And hence to start "talking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass, here, tells the story. An Aspirin Tablet starts to disintegrate almost instantaneously when you swallow it. And this is ready to go to work almost instantly. When you buy, though, be on guard against substitutes. To be sure you get ASPIRIN's quick relief, be sure the name Bayer is in the form of a cross is on every tablet of Aspirin.

Does Not Harm the Heart

Man Who Created Hot Dog Dies

First Started in 1900 — Also Publicized Double-Jointed Peanut

New York.—Harry Moxley Stevens, who created the American hot dog, and built a fortune on it, is dead at 78.

The English-born caterer to the hungry appetites of millions of the country's sport fans succumbed to arterio-sclerosis at his home here early this month after a long illness. Starting in a small baseball park at Niles, O., Stevens lived to see his business develop until the far-flung Stevens' concessions covered every major league ball park, many of the largest race tracks, old Madison Square Garden and the new Grand Central Palace.

Stevens sold the first hot dog (so named by the late Tad Dorgan, sports cartoonist) at the Polo Grounds in 1900. Sausages had been sold in rolls before that time but the hot sausage in the hot roll with mustard or pickle was his own idea. The new delicacy met with immediate acclaim from hungry sports followers and quickly developed into a national institution. Almost as well known were his double-jointed peanuts, Harry Payne Whitney once defined Stevens as the man "who parlayed a bag of peanuts into a million dollars." Stevens leased many acres of ground in Virginia where he grew the goobers and had them shipped to New York by the carload.

Born in London, Stevens came to this country in 1882 and settled in Niles where his wife had friends. After working as an iron puddler and a book salesman for a while, he hit upon what turned out to be his life career while watching a baseball game. He noticed the scorecards were amateurish and contained no advertising. Forthwith he obtained the concession for selling scorecards, quickly lined up advertising and soon was realizing a neat income. Gradually he extended his business to other ball parks. The sale of refreshments and cigars was the next step.

Boy Scouts in Canada Gair

Membership is Up — Canadian Council Meets in Ottawa.

Ottawa.—Steady growth of the Boy Scout movement in Canada was reported at the annual meeting of the Canadian general council of the Boy Scout Association held here under the chairmanship of His Excellency the Governor-General, chief scout for Canada.

The year just ended was an active one owing to the special relief activities of the organization which now numbers more than 65,000 boys and leaders. More than 5,000 badges were issued during the year to scouts qualifying for specific public service.

Postponement until next spring of the visit to Canada of Lord and Lady Baden-Powell was confirmed, and plans for their entertainment previously made were carried over until next year.

A report was presented upon the participation of a representative patrol of Canadian scouts in the fourth world scout jamboree in Hungary, and a letter read from Lord Baden-Powell stating that the Canadian scouts had distinguished themselves by their bearing and scout efficiency.

A wide variety of direct and indirect relief work during the year included the placing of scout "relief barrels" in a large number of grocery and chain stores in Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal and smaller places, and the obtaining in this way of large food contributions for local relief.

The tenth annual Christmas toy repair shop chain operated toy shops in 175 towns and cities across the Dominion, and provided Christmas gifts for well over 80,000 children, including over 9,000 on prairie home-steads.

Learns English

Girl Now in Philadelphia Used to Lay Bricks in Rumania

Philadelphia.—A girl of 20 who was a bricklayer in Rumania is learning English at night school here. Helen Ruck was born in Harrisburg, Pa., but her parents returned to the tiny town of Szemlak, Rumania, when she was two years old. There, at the customary age of 12, she left school and went to work with her father. She laid bricks for a year, then devoted her time to farm work, then worked in the fields, planted and reaped, in addition to the customary farm chores. In the evening she knit stockings of sheep wool.

A few months ago Miss Ruck returned to this country, and settled in Philadelphia. She works in a mill in the daytime and studies at an extension school at night.

She plans to return to Rumania after becoming a nurse, "in order to relieve the suffering I saw among the peasants of that land."
