WILL MAKE A GOOD MAN FOR NEW GOVERN'T

The election of Col. Fraser Hunter in St. Patrick's Ward, Toronto, was received with great pleasure by his Durham friends. It was a stiff fight he had to wage. That he is a good man for the new government, there is no doubt.

POLITICAL POT BOILINGS

Again youth must be served. Nova Scotia almost a year ago, put in a bid for the youngest Premier in Canada, when they elected Angus MacDonald as Premier of the Liberal party for that province, at the age of 40.

For down-right hard work in campaign speaking, this election has cut a new notch. Night after night, the Premier elect has been on the platform, speaking with all his power, energy and eloquence in the interests of his party, until well night exhausted.

Saskatchewan province which voted the same day, to decide as to who would sit in the seats of the mighty, decided in no uncertain tone they wanted the Liberal party at the helm once more.

The victory of D. J. Taylor, Progressive Liberal, in North Grey, was reason for much gratification among his friends. Few ridings were there where so much was attempted to oust him from his seat.

The defeat of many of the Henry cabinet was a striking commentary on what the ratepayers thought of their term of office. Cabinet men are just as responsible to the people as the private member and their work more open to public approval or displeasure.

Hoh. George S. Henry will now have more time to plow a "Straight Furrow" at his farm at Oriole. While he is doing so, he will have plenty of opportunity to ponder over how much straighter the furrow might have been made the last four years.

History repeats itself. Back in the eighties of last century, James Hill Hunter was the Liberal candidate, representing South Grey in the Legislature. Now, in 1934, his son, Col. Col. F. Fraser Hunter wins one of the coveted Toronto seats for the Liberal Government.

Durham is the only municipality in South Grey that increased the Conservative vote. Hanover is the surprise of the electorate and shows up what Hanoverites feel regarding the operations of the late government.

Campbell Grant didn't make the grade in Bruce riding. He was simply out of luck in representing the wrong party.

ARE CHURCHES OVER-ORGANIZED?

E. A. Brown of Kingsville, attending a meeting of the Laymen's section of the London Conference, of the United Church, has moved to protest the extent of financial obligation necessary to keep the head offices of the church operating at Toronto.

What degree of truth there is in his claim we do not know, and yet it is a fact that if one were to consider the amount of equipment, which most churches keep in existence apart from their local needs, cost would probably mount to an impressive figure.

Churches have many departments today and these departments have secretaries or superintendents, these people in turn need stenographers and facilities for sending out a good deal of correspondence. Each new line of effort seems to call for an organization and the organization calls for personnel.

One can hardly be blamed if after looking at many reports of church gatherings and noticing that in many churches there have been no conversions during the year, he comes to the conclusion that in many churches greater organization is not the real argument. Greater spiritual power within the church itself is the more likely solution.

Recalls Early Days on Review Staff

Mr. Joe Clark, Editor of Toronto Daily Star, has a write-up of reminiscences in the special anniversary edition of The Owen Sun-Times, which give a fair insight into the nature of this genial editor. He states that "it is a curious fact that in looking back over my life, I get more pleasure in thinking of the things I might have had a hand in than anything worthy I have done. This must be due to some flaw in my nature and when I am old and feeble I hope to repent of it."

"South of our printing office was McFarlane's blacksmith shop and at the moment Archie McFarlane came along burling a hoop, I heard him. 'Archie,' said I, 'you see that sign over there. I was going to take it off and hand it in to Mrs. Donaghy—it's a nuisance, people coming in with butter and eggs. You take it off and hand it in to her—tell her I've got to go to work because it's seven o'clock.' 'Sure,' said Archie. So I went in and watched developments through the big window. Archie went at the sign for all he was worth but pull and haul as he best could, he could not wrench it free, but with that resolution which in after life made him a successful banker, he would not give in. He got a big stick from the roadside and pried it off, but at that very moment Mr. Donaghy, red whiskers bristling, came tearing out. Archie perceiving that something had gone wrong, ran towards where I had been with the indignant photographer after him at every jump making a kick at him. Dave McFarlane, the big brother of Archie had just finished breakfast and strolling to the of his blacksmith shop looked up street a hundred yards and saw a red-whiskered photographer chasing his little brother and trying to kick the child. Dave gave no sound but he ran. Mr. Donaghy saw a streak coming for him and sensed the rest. He headed for home but at every jump Dave was trying to land a kick on him. The photographer safely reached his own door and once inside slammed it shut. Dave yelled to him that if he wanted to kick a McFarlane, to come on out. Here was a full-sized McFarlane to kick at. Mr. Donaghy opened the door wide enough to tell him that Archie had come over and with a big stick had pried the sign off the shop and right in front of his own eyes. When the explanations started I began setting type for all I was worth. Dave called Archie who said he was only doing it to oblige Mrs. Donaghy, that Joe Clark was going to take off the sign and hand it but he had to go to work at seven and had asked him to do it. 'Oh, he did it!' said Dave and he came entered the office, caught me by the collar and said things to me. But after all somehow, though I admit it was most reprehensible on my part and all that sort of thing, I cannot recall any success in my career which topped the excitement of those moments. Far better, it was, than a cycle of Cathay."
