Government Changes

Relief Policy

A new relief policy was before Ontario municipalities to-day from the Provincial Government with cash relief proposed instead of the voucher system. Hon. David Croll, Minister of Public Welfare, has announced some municipalities may implement the new form of relief on the department's approval.

Recipients of cash relief must work for standard rates of pay, the minister said. He suggested "municipal beautification" to supply such work with the minimum expenditure. Strict control will be kept over relief administration, he emphasized in his announcement last night.

Abuses will not be tolerated and the Government's motto will be "relief to workers; none to shirkers."

Mr. Croll, in his announcement stressed that it was optional with each municipality as to whether food vouchers and rent orders would be replaced with cash relief. He declared the new policy would be followed until the provinces in the Dominion can cooperate on a comprehensive scheme including unemployment insurance and a national building programme.

In a plea for co-operation from the municipalities the Minister declared the Government wished to provide adequate provision for the needy, "but it is not our purpose to subsidize private industry or private enterprise of any kind."

Those eligible for cash relief will include the sick, maimed, the widow and children and others considered unemployable. The Minister warned that men must be given work to which they are adapted and that they must not "be pushed too hard, as many are physically unfit through long illness."

"Should a man by his own initiative succeed in earning a little extra money he will be permitted to retain it and remain on relief, providing it does not exceed one-third of the food allowance for himself and family for the calendar month," the announcement continued. "If he earns more than one-third a deduction will be made for his allowance."

LATE PARTIES RUINOUS

"Parties and the cocktails and late hours that go with them are ruinous to female complexions," said Miss Laurine Rawlings, Toronto beauty expert. "The morning after a big party I have my hands full. After a drinking party followed by a feast it takes a doctor to put the stomach back in condition and a beauty specialist to do the same for the complexion."

Miss Rawlings agreed that a would-be beauty should "stick to the water wagon."—Toronto Star.

THREE FOOT CONCRETE HIGHWAYS

The Shelburne Economist says: "We have with us now in this vicinity a strip of 10-foot pavement, just finished below Dundalk on No. 10 highway. We don't like it, and we don't know anyone who does like it. One of those who very greatly disapproves of this style of road is the editor of the Chesley Enterprise, who says in part: "A really serious problem faces the Hepburn Government as a legacy from its predecessor in the highway department but we know that in several cases the contract was for a mere 10-foot strip of pavement on one or the other side of a goodly mileage of highway. The work involved several strips stretching for upwards of ten miles in each case."

Now our point is, these strips of ten-foot pavement are veritable death traps in preparation. Just why the department should have considered such a plan of developing highway paving we do not know. But we do consider that the plan bears its own condemnation on its face. Every motorist prefers pavement to ordinary gravelled road and is practically sure to cling to it as long as possible. When he meets an oncoming car he may have reluctantly to leave the paved for the gravelled part of the roadway. There is constant danger of collisions from this cause alone. But as the gravelled road wears at the edge of the pavement where the traffic must leave it in meeting oncoming traffic, ruts regularly develop and these become an even more grave source of danger than the will of the ordinary motorists to stick to the pavement. With both these factors co-operating for the production of accidents and both stressed by the encouragement to speed given by the pavement we think it is not too severe language to use when we call these strips of pavement "death-traps."

Is the new government prepared to assume this burden of responsibility bequeathed to it under these contracts entered into by its predecessor? We gravely doubt that the outgoing government intended to carry the responsibility. We believe the other ten-foot strip completing a twenty-foot pavement would have been contracted for. But here is a grave problem for a government pledged to do its utmost for economy and manifestly determined to redeem its pledge. Yet it is our conviction that the government would be well advised to have all paving brought up to a twenty-foot standard as being undoubtedly in the public interest. Moreover we believe that, with the will to economize which has been displayed, the interest rates demanded by the investigating public will be found to drop to lower levels even in the face of such necessary extra financing. But we wonder where the skill or wisdom of the engineering staff which have so much responsibility for these "death trap" plans can be discovered. Perhaps a cleaning out process, aiding economy, lies ahead here."

NOT EVEN FOR SIX DOLLARS A DAY

"If war broke out to-morrow and Canada jumped in, would you go?" That was asked to 10 Stratford veterans who served overseas during the Great War.

Seven of these 10 veterans signified they would answer a call to arms if Canada needed them. Three were tired of war, and admitted they would not go until they were conscripted. Even then one of them said they would have to force him. Here's the way he put it: "No sir, I'm a married man with a family. Why should Canada send men to Europe? I wouldn't fight until the enemy was threatening our borders. If they want me, they'll have to come and get me."

Another man replied like this: "I don't suppose I would be accepted at my age, but if the Empire were in danger and I were of acceptable age, I'd be willing to go. I don't know though, that I'd be willing to pull Franco's chestnuts out of the fire."

A third man answered: "You can put me down twice if you like. I wouldn't go."

An unemployed veteran said: "I might as well go over and get killed. I can't get a job here and I've fought in two wars—the Great War and the South African."

This is how another put it: "No sir, not for six bucks a day, they wouldn't get me."

POVERTY AMID PLENTY

"An apt utterance" is the way the Toronto Globe characterizes a remark which it attributes to Hon. Duncan Marshall, Ontario's new minister of agriculture. The remark was: "The paradox of poverty amid plenty will not be solved by attempting to abolish the plenty."

It is an apt utterance, one which has lost none of its point since Ogden L. Mills, former United States Secretary of the Treasury, said last spring:

"We shall never solve the paradox of want in the midst of plenty simply by doing away with the plenty."

THREE GROUPS WILL STOP KICKING

The Toronto Star discussing the reduction of salaries to government officials reads a little homily to those who, it says, "rejoice that hitherto well-paid people must get along with less," and says they "would be displaying a better spirit if they looked forward instead to the time when ill-paid people will be paid more." That is all right as a pious aspiration; but the reason some people get less than they should is that some other people get more than they should. Twenty-five years ago a salary of $5,000 was considered enormous. In the intervening years financial and economic changes increased prices of all kinds and salaries were increased correspondingly. Now that prices are back at pretty much their old level, in some cases higher and in some cases lower than twenty-five years ago, the workman who gets a small wage (in comparison with what he earned in the '20's), the farmer who can barely make ends meet between low prices for what he sells and comparatively high prices for what he buys, the merchant whose profits have fallen nearly out of sight—these men have a right to ask why salaries of $5,000 and over should be given to men who in former times were well paid at $2,000. If the high-salaried fellows will see that the farmer and the merchant and the workman get the same money as they did 10 or 15 years ago, the farmer and the merchant and the workman will quit grumbling about the high salaries.—Goderich Signal.

A Shelburne small boy refused to accept an ice cream cone the other day because he could only stand one a day and he had already had one. Now you tell one.—Economist.
