Not only was the popular candidate content to enlighten her hearers through the ear, but she had a carefully drawn map in the form of sever bags in red lines, representing farmers' income dating from 1928 until 1933. Running a straight line drawn in black, through all the bags (below the line representing the far mer's compulsory obligations, as taxes, insurance, etc.,) No. 1 bag showed the farmer to be able to meet his obligations with two-thirds of the bag still left for other debts; No. 2 bag less; No. 3 still less, and so or all the way to bags 1932 and 1933, which she called little salt bags. On these the straight black line showed two-thirds of the farmer's obligations under, with one-third above the line to meet those obligations, showing conclusively the utter impossibility

At the conclusion of her able ad dress, the speaker invited discussion which took the form of 'debtor's equity' for a short time. In her fair honest way, she admitted the grievance was not all one-sided.

By a standing vote, a vote of appreciation, moved by W. H. Hunter, seconded by Jas. Wilton, was tendered Hon. H. H. Stevens, lately deposed cabinet minister, for his honest effort to give the masses a living children to make up their exhibits of hands of Mr Bert Watson to be for-celebrated on that day so far as the department of the Secretary of State is concerned. In the case of statutory holidays falling on Sunday the provision is made that the following Monday will not be observed for busi ness purposes. Remembrance Day does not fall into that category. Commemoration of the armistice ending the Great War is the feature of Remembrance Day, and the incidence of its falling on Sunday does not detract but rather adds, in the opinion of State Department officials, to the fitness of the day for such observance. Any departure from the provisions in order to provide a business holiday on the following Monday will be a matter for local ruling
