Summer? Funk and Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary describes Indian Summer as "a period of mild weather occurring in the autumn, with hazy atmosphere usually along the horizon, and a clear sky." Indian Summer is a term usually applied to any period of exceptionally fine weather occurring during October or November, but the weight of authority seems to place it in November. It is impossible to define it by exact dates. This short period of warm or mild autumn weather is characterized by an almost cloudless sky, a hazy or a smoky atmosphere, and a temperature which is mild in the daytime, but cool at night. It is preceded by "Squaw Winter"-a cold spell when the thermometer first dips below the freezing point. The name is of American origin, but is now used Special Day to Each Province to the British St. Martin's Summer (St. Martin's Day being November 11) when the period occurs in November, and to St. Luke's Summer, or Little Summer of St. Luke (St. Luke's Day being October 18) when it occurs in October. In Germany it is known as "Old Woman's Sumthe popular belief that the Indian the American Indians in conversation with the first European settlers, or for the legend that the term "Indian Summer" was employed by the early settlers at ell. language.

Nobody knows who originated the rhyming story called "The House that Jack Built." It is described by the Funk and Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary as "an old English nursery story told in cumulative form, every preceding statement being repeated with the introduction of each new one. Similar tales occur in the Hebrew, among the native tribes of Africa, etc." Following is the nursery tale: "This is the house that Jack built. This is the malt that lay in the house that Jack built. This is the rat that ate the malt that lay in the house hat Jack built. This is the cat that killed the rat that ate the malt that lay in the house that Jack built. This is the dog that worried the cat that killed the rat that ate the malt that lay in the house that Jack built. This is the cow with the crumpled horn that tossed the dog that worried the cat that killed the rat that ate the malt that lay in the house that Jack built. This is the maiden all forlorn that milked the cow with the crumpled horn that tossed the dog that worried the cat that killed the rat that ate the malt that lay in the house that Jack built. This is the man all tattered and torn, that kissed the maiden all forlorn, that milked the cow with the crumpled horn, that tossed the dog that worried the cat that killed the rat that ate the malt that lay in the house that Jack built.

Newspapers Used For Saturday Night Bath

Newspapers have a variety of uses besides furnishing news and helping the manufacturer dipose of his products through advertising. In many countries they are used extensively for wrapping parcels, while in Mexico they furnish fuel for the Saturday night bath. Water is heated in cylindrical wood-burning water heaters which have a small storage capacity and fuel ranges from old newspapers to wood kindling. Cooking is done generally over charcoal burners, which is practically the only cooking stove used by the poorer classes, while practically all of the homes of the higher-income classes are equipped with grates for charcoal fires. There is no use of coal for domestic purposes and wood is only employed in open fireplaces and water heaters, and, therefore, coal and wood stoves are unknown except in the area near the American border, Oil stoves are coming into greater use in recent years, the Mexican Government endeavoring to change the cooking and heating methods of the people in order to conserve the forests which have suffered serious depletion as a result of the tremendous consumption of charcoal. Electrical stoves, ovens and other heating appliances are used only by the more wealthy classes.

Prehistoric Dwellings Unearthed Near Berlin

Berlin-The setting up Olympia village in Doberitz, a remoter suburb of Berlin, has had unexpected consequences. Near Berliner Chaussee, the foundations of five dwelling places from 2000 to 2500 B.C., have been unearthed, as well as two ash-pits containing bones and fragments of earthenware bowls. A stone-ax from the Neolithic period and an anchor have also been found. This latter find rouses great interest, in that it may be taken as proving that this sandy plain of Brandenburg was once the scene of fishing.
