PITHY ANECDOTES OF THE FAMOUS

The sad tale of a horrible printer's error is told by Ford Madox Ford, the novelist (in his delightful book, "Provence: From Minstrels to the Machine..") In an enthusiastic appreciation of Adeline Genee, famous dancer, Ford had written;

"But even Miss Genee had been dancing for ten years before she was discovered.."

The printer turned the last word into "divorced"!

Some years ago, Ford Madox Ford was well and favorably known in the literary world as Ford Madox Hueffer-his real name. For strictly private reasons he changed it, legally, to Ford Madox Ford, intending, however, to continue to write as Hueffer.. But one day-so he declares -he went to call on his London publisher, Said the publisher...

"If only you'd sign your books 'Ford' I might be able to sell the beastly things."

He explained that nothing so puts people off buying books as any difficulty in pronouncing an author's name. A book-buyer hates to feel like a fool or as one unacquainted with

Obsessed by an image of ideal womanhood, Charles Dickens was well aware of his tendency to criticize those with whom he lived, says Andre Maurois, the French writer (in his Study of the great novelist), and made fun of himself by writing his own epitaph:
