German House Frau
Not Used To Seeing
"Painted Women"

Five German tourists were spent by German tourists recently. One of the women in the party, a Bremen housewife, who knew some English and had visited every European nation, was asked for her impressions of New York.

"We find it very funny," she said, "you have little buildings and then 50-story buildings next. In Germany the churches are outstanding and here they are between shops and O-o-h! And the cemeteries, too, squeezed in here. They look very unhappy."

"New York women, they look very nice. But we are not used to seeing painted women. With me, I use powder and some people boycott me because I use a little powder and lipstick, but like little bit. But the ladies look here as if they were without any..." Here she used a German word and her interpreter, after solicitously asking her to repeat it, cleared his throat and said:
"Well, er, well—say that she thinks they look too artificial."

"The people here," she went on,
"have no idea of decorating the windows of their stores. Ja, I have been to Fifth Avenue. They are very ugly. We are all so beautiful.
Our small shops—how do you call it—on the outside of town are better than Fifth Avenue. But the chauffeurs—they are the artists here. They go by right side and by left side of autos when they find the space."

"I go to find some very thin stockings," she concluded. "These we have not."

Indian Theatre

History of Tribes Theme of First
All-Native Performance

Regina—Indian war drums rumbled in aged Cree and Saulteaux whirled in painted dances during in-termissions here at the Indian play and pageant, "The Last Great Indian Council." It is believed to be the first all-Indian play presented in the Dominion.

Fifteen players and a boys' 25-piece orchestra, recruited from Muscoupetung, Piapot and Pasqua reserves, took part in the performance. The play was a complete history of the Indian tribes of southern Saskatchewan since 1874 when the Qu'Appelle treaty was signed.

John Anaquod, 35, author of the play, and Pat Cappel, 49, the producer, have been at work on the script for five years. Harry Carriere, who painted tepees with clay, and ground rock 30 years ago, turned out the scenery.

Morgan Won't Use
Yachts This Season

Glen Cove, L.I.—J. P. Morgan's black and gold yacht Corsair, which generally rides at anchor at Morgan Memorial Park here about this time of year signaling unofficially the opening of the yachting season, will not be at her mooring this season, it was disclosed recently. The 343-foot clipperbow type craft will remain in dry dock at Tebo Basin, Brooklyn.

Once before, in 1933, Mr. Morgan did not commission his boat. It was last used in September at the regatta at Newport and shortly afterward was brought to the moorings here, where it remained for a few weeks before being taken to the shipyard for the winter.

Although Mr. Morgan generally retained most of his crew of sixty men from one season to the next, he has not followed this custom for the past three years. During the latter period there have been only Captain William Porter and a skeleton crew of five or six men.

The Nalvette, the only other yacht owned by Mr. Morgan, was sold during the winter. The Shuttle, a commuting express boat owned by Junius S. Morgan, also will be laid up this season, according to reports. It is in drydock at Fyfe's Shipyard at Glenwood Landing.

Within The Wood

I took my grief into a wood And sat beneath the April trees Barren, as yet, of foliage, To listen to the errant breeze.
Within my soul a haggard fear Haunted the beauty of the day.
Speaking of cold December death, Not of the sweet approach of May.
As hot, unwanted tears arose I heard the village church bells chime:
"And what is Life and what is Death
But orchestrated songs of time?
And some may walk and some may run."

While others lead a floral dance We live to die and die to live By some celestial circumstance.
We meet to part and part to meet All cadenced to a cosmic tune.
And if a flower fades in the Fall It buds again in fragrant June." I shed my grief within the wood, A haggard and a haunted thing, Then, hand in hand with Peace and Faith,
Went forth to meet approaching Spring.

BROKE HER LEG
AGAINST A STAIR

Whist Hampered By Rheumatism

"Two years ago," writes a woman,
"I was suffering with rheumatism in my legs, and when walking up stairs one day just kicked my right foot against the stairs, and broke my leg just below the knee. I was in hospital for four months, and when I came out someone advised me to try Kruschen Salts. I did so, and now I have no trace of rheumatism. I would not be without my daily dose of Kruschen, which I take every morning—half a teaspoonful in warm water.—Mrs. P. B.

The six salts in Kruschen stimulate the liver and kidneys to healthy, regular action; assist them to get rid of the excess uric acid which is the cause of rheumatic pains. When poisonous uric acid goes—with its deposits of needle-pointed crystals—there's no doubt about those aches and pains going too!

U.S. TO CO-OPERATE
FOR WORLD PEACE

Hull's Replies to Statements of Baldwin and Anthony Eden — To Act With Britain

Washington. — The United States is ready to co-operate with Great Britain in an attempt to maintain world peace, Secretary of State Cordell Hull said recently.

"While we were not in every instance viewed problems eye to eye," he said, "yet our common outlook and the many traditions which we share have enabled us to work together in appreciation of the importance of a constructive policy favoring the promotion and preservation of peace."

Hull was commenting upon a statement made by Stanley Baldwin, conservative leader of the British House of Commons, and Anthony Eden, Lord Privy Seal, that the United States and Great Britain eventually should co-operate to maintain world peace.

"My attention has been called," he said, "to two very friendly references to the United States in recent speeches made by Stanley Baldwin and Captain Anthony Eden. It is heartening to note such expressions which I am happy to reciprocate in full."

"Looking back over recent years I feel that both the British and Americans and I foresee that there will be in time to come many opportunities for similar helpful and constructive collaboration."

"There is no such thing as chance or accident; it being evident that these words do not signify anything really existing, anything that is truly an agent or the cause of any event; but they signify merely man's ignorance of the real and immediate cause." —Adam Clarke are said to number approximately 1,000.

Walkerton, Ont., Scouts will soon be the fortunate possessors of a specially built Scout hall, the generous gift of Mr. George D. Martyn. The headquarters will include a library, reading room, small gymnasium and shower baths. Surrounding grounds and shrubbery will help make it one of the town's attractive institutions.

One of the notable King's Silver Jubilee functions was a dinner gathbers of the Canadian Boy Scout contingent which attended the King's coronation ceremonies 25 years ago.

Later the former Scouts, now including men of all the professions, attended the great rally to welcome Lord Baden-Powell. The reunion was arranged by W. Irvine Heart, N.C., son of Sir William Heart.

Some 30,000 "Cancer Fund" envel-

The latest report of a Boy Scout collection of used clothing comes from Timmins. The Scouts of the big mining town put on the campaign to help settlers in that district whom they learned were badly in need of clothing.

A Scout troop vegetable garden

Chippawa River near Fraser Station.

SAVING THE COAST OF THE BRITISH ISLES

London Spectator

Wherever you may be along the coast of Britain you find among the dwellers there an ardent desire for protection. It is like a personal insult to see barbed wire or warnings against trespassers and much more to see dwellings set across the edge of the sea, whether close down to water, as in the Isle of Wight, or up on the cliffs as near Looe in Cornwall. If any land in the island should be nationalized it is the land that has one foot on sea and one on shore.

Access to the sea is a national demand; and no national park is so much desired as the very edge of the silver girdle. There are many gross offences against this privilege in existence; but it is said and felt by many seaside dwellers in a number of counties that the desire to buy and sell patches of land bordering on the sea is very rapidly on the increase. Even rough dunes become "building land," that is, a popular site for shacks.

Some curious uses are made of the edge of the sea. I visited on the area of rough dunes that has been famous, and indeed still is, for the number and rarity of the birds, insects and plants that have a natural home there. An essential part of it was being used for the stabling of camels and such plaguy wild fowl.

It appeared that the area had been discovered to be an excellent desert, and a passable Pacific island, a wild corner of Asia, or Africa, or where not; and we may presently find the prickly pear—that unruly pest—planted in an English estate with the object of lending "artistic verisimilitude" to the otherwise bald and unconvincing narrative of the film.

Some owners, indeed many owners of property along the shore, are wise and careful enough. Over one very lovely stretch of coast in North Devon a proclamation is set up in bold capitals on a board, containing three prohibitions. You may not put up a tent dwelling, dig sand, or preach a sermon inland from the point reached by a moderately high tide. King Canute did not offend for his sermon was acted below high water mark.

Such care of the sea's edge is not, however, universal and generally speaking, landowners are poor and ready to sell land that approaches the artificial value set on the building site. The threat against access to the sea is general; and more than rights of access are in jeopardy.

Some of the villas and shacks eyesore. The shacks are often half hidden in dunes, as at Saunton sands, but some of the cliffside villas of Cornwall and of South Wales bear their repellent colors and shapes from afar, and there is no chance of such disappearances as have been both welcomed and lamented on the "slipper" clay of the east coast, for they are founded on granite or the hardest of igneous rocks.

Chicago Daily News observes — "The National Association of Penmanship Teachers has been holding a revival convention in New York.
The problem of restoring handwriting to a status of importance in American education deeply concerns its members. But the ancient and lovely art of calligraphy has fallen, we fear, upon evil days.

Undoubtedly, despite the tremendous multiplication of typewriters, more persons than ever before are using their pens or pencils to inscribe words. Unless for some reason the attendance at schools and colleges declines, handwriting of a kind probably will continue to be increasingly practised. Only the general use of silent typewriters or stenotype machines for classroom work drive out of the use the modern successors of the stylus.
But the handwriting of the classroom is intended primarily for the reading of the writer. It tends to become hieroglyphical, as many an instructor has discovered in the weary task of decoding his students' papers. He tolerates it, perhaps because his own is worse. Some penmanship experts hold that the chief failing of writing is that the chief task of substitution of machines for the pen for nobler and more leisurely exercise.
When the printing press superseded the skilled makers of manuscript it was commerce that saved handwriting. The clerk on the high stool in the merchant's office was required to make out invoices and bills of lading in round, flowing, easily legible script. Models were developed into the business desk that went into the schools and shaped the style of those long and delightful letters which once were written for the sole sake of communication between friends and kindred minds.
Alas, commerce now gives us no aid, and the speed of modern living affords few of us time for cultivating the graces of correspondence in either mental or manual expression.
There are business men who seldom use their fountain pens except for autographing letters and checks, or scrawling memoranda on a pad.
It is true some are still scriveners. They find that imagination works more readily and words flow more freely when fingers grasp a pen or pencil. But legibility is necessary only for the author and his typist. He asks neither his publisher nor his public to read his script.

STRANGE PLANTS,
AND INSECTS
WITHOUT WINGS

From the Manchester Guardian The two young scientists who have been on a British Museum expedition to study plant life and insects at various altitudes on mountain ranges in East Africa have just returned to England after a more successful six months than they had ventured to expect. They will not know the value of their finds until the fifty cases of specimens now on their way have been examined, but they know they have secured specimens of many species not yet represented in the national collections.

This was not their first adventure.
Dr. F. E. Edwards, the entomologist, had collected specimens in South America, and so had the botanist, Dr. George Taylor, in South Africa.
They wanted to compare the plants and insects on different mountain ranges, so they went first to the Aberdare Range for a fortnight, where they found one of their plant specimens at a height of 12,500 feet.
On these mountains, and on all the others they explored, were giant groundsel, and with a flower not small weed and with a flower not unlike. These, however, were trees reaching a height of 15 feet to 20 feet, with trunks two or three feet diametric.

They found lobelia trees 20 feet high and tree ferns 15 feet high, and quantities of mosses and ferns.
Among their specimens are sections of very tall trees. Discussing the results of their explorations at the Natural Science Museum recently, they said that on the three ranges they explored they found the same types on all of them, but different species.

The expedition visited the Ruwenzori Range twice staying there for six weeks on the second visit and getting a magnificent view from the summit of the dully-named Observation Peak, and they pitched their camp 13,000 feet above sea level.

Dr. Edwards captured some rare insects on the snow-covered rocks at a height of 12,000 feet. He found big beetles in the leaves of the groundsel, and he captured many of the wingless flies. He explained that frequently in the mountain regions subject to strong winds, where wings are not of much use, the flies, especially those that walk about on the ground, lose their wings. Hitherto the museum has had no flies of this type.

They visited three of the extinct volcanoes in the Buringa Range on the border of Uganda, and here, though they saw no wild elephants, they were glad to see the elephant tracks through the forests. In the thick bamboo growth on the lower slopes they discovered two new species of mosquito, which deposit their larvae in the stem just about a joint where water collects. These mosquitoes look and bite like the common type, but they are not fever-carrying.

So our handwriting tends to become without form, and that is to be deplored. For there is a certain discipline of thought and feeling in setting the hand to shape clearly and with some measure of beauty, press them. And the reader can feel the personality behind the phrase more intimately in the script than in the type.

We have no wish to return to the flourished capitals and shaded strokes which Mr. Spencer introduced to the American public through his business colleges more than 70 years ago. That ornate style, now practised mainly by those peripatetic artists who write visiting cards for patrons, may well be left to them, but if the professors of penmanship can promote a renaissance of writing that has legibility and simple beauty of form they will add something to the grace of life, and save a lot of time for the decipherers of correspondence and all penned documents."

Discourteous Motorists
"One evening recently a car stopped at our nearest neighbour's home; the horn blew two or three times, but no one appeared. The car moved slowly down the road, turned in slightly at our door, and blew again.
Not knowing what might be wanted, I stepped to the door, which, as it was a warm day, was open. The driver of the car stuck his head out of the car and said, "Could you tell me where So-and-So lives?" (Never a please.) The thought came to me: "If you would just keep on blowing your horn at each house along the road eventually you would find the home you want," but the words were not spoken. Instead I directed him and without even "Thank you," he drove on. Did you ever think you an automobile can be a lazy per-

ANCHOR-DONALDSON

When a man has one chance out of a million, he is frequently so egoistical on the subject of his own luck, that he thinks he has a real shot as a winner.
