Rainbow Gold

by E. C. BULEY

Dan Prescott and Gordon Westerby find gold in the arid bush of Australia. They stake their claim and start the long journey to the coast.

Westerby has a fiancée, Gladys Clements in England, but when they arrive in Sydney he marries a pretty blonde.

"I suppose it's all right," Dan said doubtfully. "Anydoubt about it will be removed."

Prescott, if you go to London, and tell intending shareholders the honest truth. That's all Modicott will ask of you.

Dan didn't say yes, but he didn't say no. They dined festively and sumptuously that evening.

His partner and his partner's bride made a rare feast of the farewells; and after Lorna had flung her arms about his neck and hugged him.

Well, he might as well be hung for a sheep as a lamb!

Eve Gilechrist sat at the window of her best-sitting-room, looking down upon the activities of the London street two flights below her.

She had been out of work nearly a month now, and the anxieties and deprivations of unemployment were wearing upon her.

Mechanically she noted that the hard-worked doctor had drawn up his car before the apartment building opposite.

Eve mechanically noticed these things, hardly aware that she was observing them or that they had any significance.

As she emerged upon the street, things had begun to happen. The second man—the shorter one, who wore a hat of green velvet—was poised before the window of the corner shop.

Use Caution in Adding Fruit to Baby's Diet

Applesauce and Prune Pulp May Be Given To Infants; Stew Berries For Three-Year-Olds

Youth At The Wheel

(Detroit Free Press)

A youthful contributor in somewhat heated over a suggestion by another writer that the minimum age limit for drivers of cars be made 18 years.

This youngster who signs himself "Not Quite Eighteen," says, "It is not the young men and young ladies that cause the accidents, but doddering old men and women."

Something might perhaps be said here about bad manners in referring to one's elders, but let that pass. What is really important is the question of fact.

According to statistics compiled by the Travelers Insurance Co., 16,800 drivers under 18 years of age were involved in accidents in the United States last year. In 980 cases these accidents were fatal.

During the same period drivers 65 years of age or older figured in 11,800 motor car mishaps, of which 850 were fatal.

The superiority of the immature young over the "doddering" aged is not very evident.

Prairie Flowers Painted for London

Winnifred Walker Adds To Canvas Records Now Famous

Regina—Winnifred Walker, international known painter of wildflowers, while on a tour through Saskatchewan put on canvas the colorful blooms which grow on the prairie.

She has been awarded medals at exhibitions held in London, Paris, Philadelphia and Ghent, and her pictures have been hung in Paris salons and the Royal Academy in London.

"I was simply drunk with delight," said Miss Walker. "When I went into the Yosemite Valley in California before coming here and found so many flowers that have never been painted before."

"I painted 120 different kinds of Canadian wild flowers from Montreal to Vancouver when I was here in 1928," the visiting artist said.

"Canadian flowers have a remarkable beauty and grow very well in England. Lady Byng has a Canadian garden in which she grows dozens of different kinds of Canadian flowers and shrubs.

A horticultural artist must have a wide knowledge of botany and Miss Walker explained very often she can tell the patronage of a flower by merely rubbing the foliage or a petal between her fingers.

"My pictures must be exact reproductions of the flowers, for size, color and distinctive markings so they can be recognized by flower growers for what they are," she said.

A Hat To Wear If You Have The Mumps

New York—At last it has been created: a hat "to wear when you have the mumps, and want to go out that night."

This long-needed bit of headgear—a turban with a gold veil that swatches the ears and throat—was brought forth at a fall hat show.

The designer (John-Fredericks) also launched this style hint: Splash some ink on your new fall hat if you would be smart, and match it with an ink-stained scarf.

The ink splashes, red and blue, appeared on a white wool scarf and white insets of a sapphire blue velvet hat.

Youth At The Wheel

About this time of year mothers are wondering what fruits may be safely given young children.

Little babies under six months had better stick to orange juice, prune juice, and tomato juice. The time for enlarging baby's fruit diet is usually about six months.

Both must be cooked thoroughly and with very little sugar. They should be strained, and the first dose is one teaspoonful.

After a few days increase the amount slightly if the fruit agrees with baby.

GIVE IT AT NOON We are, of course, talking about a well child. Don't experiment with new foods when he is ill.

It is not surprising that many of the letters I receive from readers ask whether there is any indication of talent revealed in their handwriting.

It is, after all, natural that people should be vitally interested in finding what is the best line of education to follow, and any information that helps them to get the best out of their capabilities and make the most use of their latent talents is always welcome.

Handwriting does indicate talent, when there is talent in the writer. This is not to be wondered at when we realize that handwriting comes from the brain, and the brain is the source of individual power and capability.

However the mere possession of a talent is by no means everything. We all know people who are talented in a particular way, but who do not reach any heights of attainment; who, in fact, drift along without ever doing anything really worth-while.

I know a man who has a real genius for cartooning. With him, it is an inborn talent, and worth intrinsically many thousands of dollars.

His trouble is that he has failed to harness his talent. He has lacked the capacity to make a continuous effort to succeed in his particular type of work.

Parents Shouldn't Always Speak For Children

This Story Is About A Mother Who Didn't Give Youngster Chance To Answer Questions.

"Good morning, Mrs. White. Isn't it hot? Hello there, young man—out shopping with mother?"

"Yes," said Mrs. White, "I can't leave him alone. He runs all over the neighborhood."

"What's your name, dear?" "William," said Mrs. White. "I call him that. He is Bill to his father, of course. It's like the poem you see. Grandma calls him Willy and the boys call him Bill."

"Aren't you glad school's over?" Mrs. Black made another overture toward the listless little boy.

"Yes, he's glad, but I'm not. He's into something every second. William, stop that. Can't you answer Mrs. Black?"

The ladies talked a few minutes, then Mrs. Black said again to William, "How old are you, my dear?"

"He isn't quite eight," promptly vouched his mother. "He is three years younger than Mary. His birthday is next Tuesday. We think he is tall for his age."

MOTHER KNOWS ANSWER "Then I suppose that means a nice big birthday cake?" Mrs. Black smiled at the boy.

"Indeed, no," retorted Mrs. White. "I have had enough to do with in parties. Don't ever let yourself in for chairmanship of a committee, Mrs. Black. You will never have a minute to yourself."

"Well, he is a very nice boy anyway. I wish I had one like him. That reminds me. My brother's son is coming to visit me next week. Will you come over and play with him, William?"

NO CHANCE TO REPLY "Certainly. He'll be delighted to go," put in Mrs. White, promptly. "Won't you, William? Why, William, I don't believe you've heard a word Mrs. Black was saying. New stop stamping on those peanut shells and be a gentleman. It's all right, Mrs. Black. He'll be over to play with your nephew. I guess the cat's got his tongue today."

They parted, Mrs. B. murmuring to herself, "Not the cat but his mother. The youngster didn't have a chance to say a word. And she is probably scolding him now because he had offered a few words on his own account she would have told him not to interrupt. I wonder if she realizes that she was more rude to him than he was to me. In fact he wasn't rude at all. He never had a chance."

Gathering, Keeping Marketing Eggs Deep, roomy nests, provided for the hens, will reduce egg breakage. Eggs should be collected at least once daily and during very cold and very warm weather collections should be made at noon and night to avoid freezing or heating.

The eggs should be taken at once to a cool cellar, where there is a fairly uniform low temperature. It may be advisable to open one or two windows and substitute screens covered with cheesecloth for ventilation to carry off excessive moisture or odour.

Clean pine shavings have proven to be the best nest material. Shavings facilitate cleaning and form a better cushion in the nest than hay or cut straw.

At this season of the year shells are more likely to be brittle and the contents to be of poorer quality, due to hair cracks and so called "grass" or dark yolks, and careful candling is advisable if the best prices are to be obtained.
