Science Tackles Milking Hazards

(Richard S. Davis in the Milwaukee Journal).

Albert Giese, an honest and gifted husbandman from the land of the tall corn, is being widely acclaimed for an invention that may revolutionize the dairy industry. The farmer-inventor has perfected a device that he warrants will keep the tail of any cow out of the eye of any milker and thus will eliminate one of the greatest of all hazards on the farm.

tion that milk flows merrily from a N.B., the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac spigot, as do root and other beers, H. Without being too technical about it, the editor gladly explains that in milking it is usual for at least one eye to be exposed to the cow's tail. Even if the milker presses his or her brow against the side of old Bess, it is still possible for Bessie's tail to come violently in contact with the off eye. Just try it some time.

And the tail of even the friendliest of cows is a weapon. On occasion, it positively zooms past the ear of the husbandman and whistles as it whams his eye. It is an impersonal instrument that swishes without malice, but it is probably the world's most hazardous fly swatter.
